

Student, Faculty Poll

spent on registration. On the solution side, the general consensus of opinion was that there should be an entirely separate period for registration, eliminating pre-registration completely. Many professors felt that the period of pre-registration served only to confuse both students and teachers and that the whole week before finals was completely lost.

The opinions of the students on registration and classes on the same day revealed much the same attitude as that expressed by the faculty.

Barbara Booth, freshman in liberal arts, felt that the deadlines should be clearer and everything should be done at the same time.

Sally Waller, senior in political science, said that for upper-division students like herself, registration and classes on the same day didn't present much of a problem, however, for freshmen and some sophomores, where the classes were so diversified, the problem was acute.

One of the veterans on the campus, Lyle Dybdahl, sophomore in business, stated that for them past registration was terrible because all of them had to stand in the book line in the Co-op and were unable to attend classes.

A large majority of students felt that seeing advisers presented one of the major problems of registration. Along the same line, the students felt that waiting so long to see advisers plus having to wait in innumerable lines to register for classes made missing classes almost unavoidable. Upon this point, both students and professors agreed.

Robert Jones, senior in journalism felt that the whole system needs a great deal of improvement.

"Lines could be eliminated through having all registration at Mac Court. This would also eliminate a large share of the general confusion," he said.

Bob Funk, sophomore in liberal arts, expressed a generally applauded opinion:

"It's too much to expect us to go to classes we aren't even registered for."

One group of girls decided that more emphasis should be placed on pre-registration, one to two days should be allowed between terms to complete registration, and that it was much too frustrating to decide between note-taking in class or payment of a $5.00 late fee.

gles by Cal Smith, Ken Allen, Keith Allen, and Bob Johnson; doubles by Russ Ward, Hal Lemon, Al Gem-mell, and Ken Preston; and a home run by Lemon gave Phi Psi a lead they never relinquished as they finally won, 18 to 1. Hal Lemon was the leading hitter of the game, collecting a walk, two singles and two home runs off five times at bat.

The only game of the day that approached closeness was the Lambda Chi-Pi tussle in which the ifrst inning ended 3 to 2 Lambda Chi on top.

The Pi Kap's first two runs were scored when Bob Bradley walked, Frank Beeson grounded out to advance him, Charley Showmaker singled, Lloyd Shultz singled, and Ken Ireland doubled. Tom Patton was the winning pitcher, and Bill Morrison and Lloyd shared chucking duties for the losers. Lambda Chi's Ron Hall had a perfect day with a home run, double, tripple, and single.
