

63 Dorm Students Moved to Fill Rooms

An estimated 63 dormitory residents have been moved in the effort to fill each multiple room to capacity, Genevieve Turnipseed, director of dormitories, said Thursday.

Shuffling of students to fill rooms has been undertaken so some rooms can be closed off for the rest of the term. Thus, no student paying for a multiple occupancy room will be living alone, the dormitory office explained.

"It's the only fair thing to do, it has been done every year since I have been at the University, and it is done in dormitories all over the United States," Mrs. Turnipseed said Thursday.

The number of those moved is broken down as follows: Vets Dorms, 21; Carson Hall, 30; and John Straub, an estimated two in each of the six halls. The number in Hendricks Hall has not been tallied.

In reference to a protest launched by the Inter-dormitory Council against the moving, Mrs. Turnipseed said she has no comment, but would work out the problem with dormitory residents.

The IDC charged that reasons for the shuffling were "inadequate" or "erroneous," attacked the University's stand point by point, and requested a statement from the Administration relative to future dorm policy.

would prohibit the sale of any liquor which is promotively advertised in any publication within the state. That would include beer.

I don't think these people are actually concerned with the curtailing of liquor advertising revenue. They still seem to be trying the notion that if kids see a liquor ad they will want to get drunk. People are still going to drink. Maybe some of the Oregon Liquor Control Commission brands might sell better if this bill is passed, but outside of that I see no definite change in the sale of liquor in the state.

The hero, now safely demobilized, attends a veteran's organization meeting, and finds that his father (who conveniently died when hero was a child) had been on the island of Kahailela during the Spanish-American unpleasantness, and had made the same pitch for the Congratulations to Sigma Kappa Pledge Lucille Wright on being chosen a Junior Weekend finalist while on crutches. I hear she had to go to the eliminations in flat heels. That s' a definite drawback. If you don't believe it, check a gal with heels and without.

The Emerald crew is still burning over the latest instance of their being ignored on the breaking of a big campus story. The Sabine appointment was ready on Wednesday. The big papers got the word on Friday for the Sunday editions and the Emerald read it then. It's nothing new, but it still isn't good.

Upon hearing this you hurriedly switch back to the ball game to find that both pitchers hurled no hitters, one of them bowing 1-0 on a walk and three solen bases in succession.

Seriously, though, its nice to see the workshop turning out some original work. It's far from Corwin, but then so is a lot of professional stuff. Also, a "thank you" to KERG for helping out Villard Hall's displaced persons.

Pallett Still Sees Opportunity For Top Men in Social Science

By LISBETH TRULLINGER

So you want to teach social science. You've heard that it's a field full to the brim, but you want to brave it anyway.

According to E. M. Pallett, director of the University teacher placement service, the field is as full as reported. But if you really like history, government, and the other high school subjects that are included in the social science world, and want to teach them, the head of the placement service says to go ahead with your plans.

"There is always room at the top in teaching for a really top person," Dr. Pallett says.

Full of Social Science

Oregon's school system seems to be full of social science, English, and men's physical education teachers. Also there are many science and math teachers, and good jobs are often hard to find for the teacher in these crowded fields.

Teachers who are prepared to teach commerce, art, music, women's physical education, languages, and library are most in demand. Elementary school teachers are also scarce and good jobs for them are numerous.

However if you are prepared to teach courses in the more crowded fields, the head of the placement center advises that future teachers prepare themselves for better job opportunities by taking courses that would enable them to handle an outside activity in the high school.

Ability to take care of the library in a small school, or supervise work in journalism, intramural sports, drama, or music will help the teacher to find jobs within the state.

Women to Attend Playday at OSC

Women students may sign up through today to attend "Cosmic Capers," a playday on the Oregon State campus Saturday. Sign-up sheet is on the Gerlinger Hall bulletin board.

Transportation will be provided, with cars leaving Gerlinger Hall at 8 a.m. and returning by the dinner hour.

Games scheduled for the day include archery, badminton, tennis, ping pong, horse shoes, softball, volleyball, swimming, and square dancing.

For more information students may contact Bonnie Gienger, president of the Women's Athletic Association, at Hendricks Hall.

Job Opportunities Open for Seniors

Job opportunities for graduating seniors are being received by the graduate placement office daily and are worth investigation, Karl W. Onthank, placement director, reported recently.

Onthank said that the six jobs listed below are samples of positions which may be assumed on graduation.

An opportunity to participate in the senior trainee program of a large Portland bank.

A position in a national surety company.

An opening for a bio-chemist in a federal research laboratory.

Opportunities for women in YW-CA work.

An insurance adjustment position open in Portland.

An opening in a major lumber business. "This is an extraordinary opportunity for someone who can fill the qualifications," Onthank stated.

Further information is available from Onthank, 216 Emerald Hall.
