

Air Team to Explain Expansion Program

Careers in the air force for college men and women will be explained by a team of air force officers here May 24, 25 and 26. The visit is part of a nationwide program to build up an officers corps composed mainly of college graduates.

The team of officers will explain the various officer training programs, the requirements and processing procedure. Interviews will be given to interested students and the air force team will explain the program the student can follow after graduation.

Three types of programs are proposed. Aviation cadet pilot training provides a year of flying, academic, and military training. The graduates receive commissions as second lieutenants in the Reserve, with Regular Army commissions going to outstanding graduates. Age limit is set at 20 to 26½ years.

A program for navigators is also proposed. With classes at Houston, Tex., the cadets receive a year's training in air force navigation and receive second lieutenant's commissions after graduation. Age requirements are the same as for cadet pilots.

The third field of training is non-flying, officer candidate training, for both men and women. Classes in military leadership are held at Lackland Air Force Base, San Antonio, Tex.

KDUK Fate

"Expansion of our radio facilities will benefit every member of the student body. Student support in this drive is the only way of getting KDUK back on the air," Vaughn explained.

The breakage fee drive has the official sanction of the administration, the Executive Council, and the Department of Speech.

Special Fund Planned
Money obtained from pledged fees will be set aside in a special campus radio fund, in the speech department. A student committee will be appointed as an advisory board in the spending of money.

KDUK will be in operation after technical problems are solved to meet FCC standards. The F-M transmitter will be purchased immediately after funds are made available.

History Feature Friday
KDUK won't be a newcomer to the University radio scene. The campus station first went into operation a year ago, but was discontinued after two weeks because of technical difficulties.

To acquaint students with the whole story, a feature on the history of University radio—including the KDUK experiment—will appear in Friday's Emerald.
