'Fighting Lady' Showing to Aid Recruiting Today

A "vivid, exciting and realistic" pictorial presentation of the air war in the Pacific during World War II will be seen this afternoon when "The Fighting Lady" is shown in 207 Chapman at 4 p.m.

Shown under the sponsorship of the Naval Air Reserve Training Unit at Seattle, "The Fighting Lady" presentation will be part of the information appearance of Lt. Commander H. J. Martin and Chief J. L. Fairbanks. The two Navy officers will be on the campus to explain the program of the Naval Air Reserve Training Unit.

"The Fighting Lady" was made under actual battle conditions on the decks of an aircraft carrier in the early phases of the Pacific war. Shot entirely in color, the movie was first shown to military personnel. Since the war it has been seen in many commercial movie theaters. The movie will be open to all students.

Lt. Commander Martin and Chief Fairbanks will be available for interviews all day Thursday. Interested persons may contact Karl Onthank, graduate placement director, for further information.

The Naval Air Reserve program includes a four-year contract, paying $355 a month. A minimum of two years in college is required with an age limit of 18 to 27. The program is not open to married men.

Status Check Needed Before Summer School

The Veterans' Administration announced Wednesday that all veterans planning to attend summer school under Public Law 346 should check immediately to determine their eligibility status.

Any veteran planning to attend the same school in the same major field need only register for the summer session and follow the necessary veterans' procedure.

Students planning to enroll in a different school must file an application for a supplemental certificate, listing the name of the school and the proposed course. A change in course, either at the same school or in a different school, requires a new supplemental certificate.

Veterans who wish to change to their general field of study must submit reasons for such a change. The Veterans' Administration must approve any changes before a supplemental certificate will be issued.

Further information may be secured from J. D. Kline, veterans' adviser, Emerald Hall. All applications for eligibility certificates must be filed through the Portland office of the Veterans' Administration.

Solo Tryouts Saturday

Tryouts for soloists with the University Symphony Orchestra will be held at 10 a.m., Saturday in the Music School auditorium.

The auditions are designed to select the most outstanding music students from the standpoint of public performance. The program will be open to the public.
