New Instruction Cards
Registrar Clifford R. Constance yesterday explained how to fill out the new instructor cards, which take the place of the old class cards.

Across the top of the card is space for the usual information such as name, course and so on. At the bottom of the card is a cross schedule for the entire class week, with space for each week.

Instead of writing in which section of the course he wishes to enter, the student will merely check the spaces when the particular class meets. This card is then left with the department, if it is accepted, and a receipt in the form of the department stamp is put on the student's registration card, which is filed with the registrar as the last step of registration.

The usual late fee assessments will be made against students who do not complete registration within the two-week limit set up by the registrar's office.

Signers to Drop Petition Against Class Elections

A petition submitted by eight students last spring term asking for judiciary committee investigation of the 1950 ASUO class elections is being withdrawn, President Barry Mountain, said Tuesday.

The petition protested the listing of candidates on the ballots in the order of their parties, rather than in strict alphabetical order of names. A judiciary committee decision for the petitioners could have necessitated new class elections.

"The desire of the petitioners was apparently to guard against setting a precedent, not to have last year's elections termed invalid," Mountain explained.

The ASUO president met with the petitioners Tuesday, and they decided to submit a second petition to the committee asking for withdrawal of the first petition.

Parties, rather than names, were placed in alphabetical order (Associated Greek Students candidates first and United Students Association candidates second) by accident, Mountain believes.

Political science authorities state that the order of names on the ballot can sometimes make as much as ten per cent difference.

The eight signers presented the petition to last year's ASUO president, Art Johnson, at the end of spring term.

ber of last year's student court now in the armed forces.

Court Lacks Members
The court will start functioning as soon as new members can be selected, ASUO President Barry Mountain explained. Steve Church the other carry-over member of the court, is entering law studies and resigned because of an over-full schedule.

Petitions will be called for by the Executive Council next week, Mountain said. The court is designed to include one sophomore, one junior, and one senior.

Student parking lots will continue in the same locations as last year, it was stated. Rules and penalties for this year's court are essentially the same.

Student parking violators will be issued tickets by campus police, and may then pay a fine or appear before the court.

Choral Tryouts Set

Choral Union tryouts are now being held in Room 206 of the Music Annex. Although a one-hour credit is given for the course, it is not required and can be taken as an activity. Tryouts are necessary before signing up during registration.

and house of representatives will speak to students.

Assemblies will be held on different days to avoid too heavy an interference with any one day's schedule.

Committee Named

W. A. Dahlberg, associate professor of speech, is chairman of the assembly committee. Appointed to work with him are students Donna Brennan, senior in speech and Bob Gray, junior. Two other students will be appointed to ex-officio positions on the board to represent the executive council and the student union board.

Faculty members on the board include E. M. Pallett, director of teacher placement service, H. E. Dean, assistant professor of political science, Rosamond Wentworth, associate professor of physical education, Olga Yevtich, program director of the student union, H. R. Lemons, athletic business manager, Robert Hord, assistant professor of piano, Lyle Nelson, (ex officio, director of information.
