Editor Advises Reporting Class

"Start a writing career on a small newspaper," Verne McKinney, editor of the Hillsboro Argus, advised the introduction to journalism class Thursday.

"There you can do a number of tasks rather than have one routine, as on a metropolitan daily," he explained.

A broad education, accuracy, ability to mix the practical with the theoretical, and perfect spelling, punctuation, and grammar are essential, McKinney added in listing a reporter's requirements. He strongly recommended working on the Emerald while at school and procuring vacation jobs at home town papers for aspiring writers.
