Oregon Down,
But Not Out,
Say Students

By Larry Hobart

The Oregon football team may be on the ropes, but it's not down for the count yet!

So said Oregon students when asked the question, "What do you think of the Oregon football team's future?"

Dismayed by the recent loss to Idaho, the Oregon rooters nevertheless exhibited a hope that the Webfoots would be able to chalk up the next contest on the victory side of the state. Casting aside the opinions of a few hardened pessimists, the students revealed a belief that the "Green Machine" may still find itself this season.

Bill Sage—junior in architecture—"Our consistent losses are only a psychological move by Aiken. The team will lose the rest of the games this year and then next year, rated as an underdog, the team will rise up to end the season in a shower of rose petals."

Joe French—senior in pre-law—"I think that we still have a pretty good team. I know we have a good coach. Even though Idaho did beat us for the first time in 25 years, Notre Dame was beaten too. Let's stick by the team."

Pat Jones—freshman in liberal arts—"I'm still hoping."

Bob Elordi—sophomore in business administration—"The team has a lot of sophomores now. By the time they are seniors, things should be looking up."

Ronald Pulfer—senior in business administration—"I think that we have a great many good boys on the team. Like everyone else, I can't see what's gone wrong this far. However, anything can happen between Oregon and OSC."

Delores Drinker—freshman in art—"I heard that at the Stanford game last weekend the entire rooting section laughed when the Oregon-Idaho score was announced. We lost a lot of players last year, but I think that with the advantage of this year's experience we'll come back next year."

Gene Gould—senior in journalism—"Speaking from strictly a scientific viewpoint, I think that the team is rather poor. I think they've had it."

Diana Ketteringham—sophomore in liberal arts—"I think that in a few years the team will be fine, but right now it certainly isn't. I still think that we've got a chance to beat OSC, although it will be pretty close."

Franklin Wise—freshman in pre-dental—"Things don't look too bright. The Oregon-Oregon State game will be a contest to see who can out-fumble whom."

Bada Boylen—sophomore in liberal arts—"From what I've seen so far, I'm a bit pessimistic. But the team plays good ball—at least that's what the boys tell me."

'Visual Arts' Topic
Of Lecture Forum

Sacheverell Sitwell's writings on visual arts will be the principal topic of the lecture forum at 7:30 tonight in the Browsing Room at the Student Union.

M. D. Ross, professor of architecture, will speak on Sitwell's life, and some of his other writings. Sitwell is a very prolific writer, Ross commented.

Sitwell, a contemporary writer of England, is a member of a famous literary family. He is most famous for his lyric poetry.
