

Bianca Part Second Role For UO Theater Veteran

By Don Smith

"She's a prostitute," is the three-word description that Jo DeLap, junior in speech, has for Bianca, the role she plays in the University Theater production of "Othello," which opens Dec. 1.

"But a very nice girl, anyway," Miss DeLap adds. "She's really full of fun, frivolity, and gaiety."

This is the actress' first attempt at Shakespeare, her only other University Theater acting assignment being Antiope in last season's favorite, "The Warrior's Husband." But the two roles are opposites.

"Antiope was afraid of men," Miss DeLap explained. "Bianca chases them."

The man she chases is Cassio, played by Don Doak.

"But Cassio doesn't love Bianca, even though Bianca throws herself at him. He just thinks she's too low for him."

The role is small but good, Miss DeLap thinks. She's particularly happy about her third scene, in which "I've learned of Cassio being wounded, and Iago tries to involve me in helping to contrive the attack upon Cassio. I just lie on the steps sobbing."

But does she finally get her man?

"Oh nobody worries about that," she explains. "I just lie on the steps for awhile, and then run off sobbing. What an exit!"

While this is Miss DeLap's second acting job, it represents the 10th consecutive University theater production that she's worked on, in one way or another.

"It all started with 'The Show Off' in old Guild Hall, the last regular production in the old theater. I followed the plays from there into the new theater."

She's worked on each production, regular and summer season, working at every job from assistant director through stage crews and acting. She's worked on lights, props, construction, box office, and cloakroom crews—in fact "everything but the sound crew."

Her biggest backstage assignment was stage manager for "Martha," the largest production to be presented so far on the new stage.

The theater has kept her busy, but she still finds time for the activities of Pi Delta Phi, the French honorary, and Phi Beta, music and speech honorary.

And what is she going to do in the next theater production?

"Oh, I don't know. Maybe sweep the lobby carpet—I haven't done that yet."
