Maybe This Is It

THIS PICTURE of a "skyhook" balloon, 77,000 feet above Minneapolis, was taken through a refracting telescope during cosmic ray studies. Look magazine quotes Dr. Urner Liddel, chief of the nuclear physics branch of the Office of Naval Research, as saying there has been no reliable report of a "flying saucer" observation which is not attributable to these comic balloons. ### Elementary Ed Transfer Plans Okayed for UO

The State Board of Higher Education recently approved a program whereby students in the School of Education may transfer to a teachers' college for three terms to fill their elementary teaching major and then return to the University to get their degree.

During the temporary transfer to a teacher's college the students would take elementary teaching courses that are not allocated to the University, such as supervised teaching, children's literature, mental hygiene, general and special methods courses to complete their elementary teaching major.

Before this program was approved, students in education would get their degree at the University, and then go to summer school to study for an "Emergency Certificate." After teaching elementary grades for one year they would return to a teacher's college to get a full certificate.

"Enrollment is building in the graduate education school, but the new program won't affect undergraduate enrollment. After students have reached their junior year they usually do not have to leave the campus for three terms to study at another school," according to A. A. Sandin, professor of education.

These mid-term tests aren't really bad; It's just the grades that make me sad.

Thirty-Five Students Interviewed For Selection as Naval Reservists

Thirty-five University students, including two women, were interviewed by the Navy Reserve Officer Selection Board Thursday at the Naval Training Center, 1520 13th Ave. W., according to Lieut. Comdr. George W. Ennis, center commandant.

Students from Oregon College at Monmouth and one from Linfield brought the total number of applicants for commissions in the Naval Reserve to 41.

Lieut. Comdr. Ennis will withhold the names of Oregon students applying for the program until they have been completely processed for enlistment.

Other freshmen, sophomores, or juniors who wish to make application for the reserve program, leading to a Naval commission, are asked by Ennis to contact the training center. Interviews with the selection board can be arranged for a later date in Portland, he said.
