Counseling Center Offers Assistance to Students

The University Counseling Center offers assistance to "any university student who feels that he has a problem, great or small, which some outside help would enable him to solve," according to J. Spencer Carlson, director of the center.

Mr. Carlson emphasized that the center does not solve people's problems for them because college students have problem-solving ability. Sometimes, however, they are faced with blocks and need assistance in getting around them, he added.

The supplying of information on one's vocational or educational choice is another service of the Counseling Center. It provides a means by which students can secure, in an organized fashion, an over-all view of occupations, and attempt to reduce the range of possible occupational choice. Carlson stated that this is a continuing process which begins with the freshman year. In their freshman and sophomore years, students need to be directed toward the field of their major interest. When they reach upper-division specific occupations can then be considered.

One of the programs of the center is the entrance testing program. This is given to all students upon their entrance to the University, and it is given to local students in the spring of their senior year in high school. During the next two weeks, high school students will be observed around Fenton Hall on Tuesday and Thursday's when they will be taking the entrance exams.

Other programs administered by the Counseling Center are the selective service tests, research programs to improve methods of predicting college performance, the reading and speech clinics, and training in counseling for students who wish to go into that field. Those interested in the later program are given training and work with high school students in local high schools. Mr. Carlson said that some college men had been seeking advice about what branch of the service to enter. He stated that because of the difficulty in judging the standards of the various armed services, it was hard to give advice on this subject, but some help can be given about various phases of the problem.

The Counseling Center is open all week and Saturday mornings in Emerald Hall. Mr. Carlson emphasized that the center offers help to all students who have personal or vocational-educational problems. The efforts of the counseling staff are directed toward each student as an individual, and not as a group or class.

Oregon Hall To Undergo Remodeling

Those little holes which appeared behind Oregon Hall Tuesday were dug in long-range preparation for the proposed Business Administration-social sciences remodeling and addition.

Workmen dug the holes to test the ground in that area for the foundation for the building. The BA-social sciences project is part of the State Board of Higher Education's building program now before the State Legislature's ways and means committee.
