KWAX's Frequency Modulation Is Advantageous But Unnoticed

By Marge Elliott
Some radios can receive sound waves from KWAX, Oregon's new radio station. Others cannot. This is because KWAX is an FM-frequency modulation station.

It has become apparent since the opening broadcast of the University 10-watter that there are those on the campus and in the vicinity that aren't aware that this makes any particular difference. But it does, and here's why.

Two General Types
There are two types of radio broadcasting stations in general use today...AM and FM. AM means amplitude modulation and is the most general type of radio. AM can be heard at a great distance from the station, but it often has static.

FM means frequency modulation. An FM station, such as KWAX, can be heard only on radios that have AM and FM receivers, or single FM radios. On most of the newer radio sets, a special band labeled FM will be found under the AM dial line. An FM band has numbers on the dial running between 88 and 108. To get KWAX, turn the selector switch to FM and then tune the dial to somewhere near 88. Tune above and below 88 until the loudest signal in that part of the dial is found.

Disadvantages, Too
The disadvantage of FM is mainly a smaller listening audience, because most people have only AM receivers as they are less expensive than double modulation receivers. The advantages are that FM never fades, there is little if any static due to weather conditions, and that FM stations never cut in on each other.

AM radios can be adjusted to pick up FM stations. In most cases, however, the process is more expensive than buying one of the cheaper FM and AM radios. The best bet would be to buy a purely FM radio.

YWCA Sponsors Sophomore Picnic

A "Weinie Roast" sponsored by the YWCA sophomore commission for all freshman girls is being held at 5 p.m. today at Armitage Park.

Tickets for the event, costing 25 cents, may be purchased from ticket salesmen in the dorm and are also available at the Y. They should be purchased before leaving for the picnic. Transportation is being provided, according to Jean Gates and Jean Webb, co-chairmen for the event. Anyone wishing to attend should meet at the Y by 5 p.m.

When American hoboes meet in convention, the railroads have heavy traffic but little business.

ROTC to Have Group Sponsor

Women to act as sponsors for the final review parade to be presented by the ROTC department May 31 were called for Monday by Scabbard and Blade, military honorary.

Letters will be sent to each woman's living organization asking that a representative be selected, Ward Haynes, honorary president said. The only requirement stipulated by Haynes was that the woman designated as a sponsor be "pretty."

Women's living groups are requested to pick their choice by May 17.

The sponsors program is being promoted by Scabbard and Blade with the co-operation of the military department. It is intended that the women selected this year

Openings Available For Summer Tour

Three openings still remain for the University of Oregon European tour arranged by Simmons Student Travel, according to Barbara Stevenson, student tour leader.

The tour, limited to 12 women, will begin July 10 when the group will sail from New York on the SS Degraffe of the French Line. Countries to be visited include France, Italy, Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, and England.

The two-month tour will cost $1,025, Miss Stevenson said. She pointed out that this includes transportation, hotels, meals, sightseeing, and tips.

For further information concerning the tour, students may call Miss Stevenson at the Kappa Alpha Theta house. Reservations for the trip should be made as soon as possible, she stated.
