Wachum Says Morals Have Gone to the Dogs

Campus morals have "gone to the dogs" reported I Due Wachum, caretaker of the I.O.O.F. graveyard, in an interview today.

"In my twenty years of digging up dirt in the graveyard I have seen lots of student activities," Mr. Wachum began. "Morals of university students have grown progressively worse," he said.

Wachum, a combination ditch-digger and gardener, has diligently done his duty to keep the graveyard neat and well-kept during his many years of employment here. The cemetery, as students well know, is a never-ending source of enchantment, and it has traditionally been the focal-point of many extra-curricular activities.

A spry gentleman, for his 80 years, Wachum released the results of a survey he made "just out of curiosity" on the sexual life of students, as seen from his observations in the cemetery.

The patrol results of Wachum's survey on the sexual activity of U. of O. students is as follows:

The number of students doing the following on the night of May 11: Looking into each other's eyes, 126; Whispering sweet nothings, 103; Hugging, 225; Holding hands, 231; and kissing, 377. Further information was unavailable, due to censorship by the O.S.S.A. (Office of Student's Sexual Affairs).

New Library Plan To Make Big Mess

"First come, first served in our new plan of giving away books," Marl P. Wince, University librarian, explained after hints that one Eugene store had started a price war on used copies of "Up From the Ape." "We are determined to meet all competition head-on," he asserted, "even if we must give away every book on the campus."

Mince noted that not enough books had been stolen up to this time. "Students will have to get on the ball," he snorted. "If they don't speed things up we'll have some volumes left over at the end of the term."

In view of this, the library has been instructed to help any student desiring use of the "take-home" policy. This policy, Mince explained, permits the student to back his car onto the sidewalk at the side door, and to take anything he can get his hands on.

"I don't know that we will have any takers," Mince rasped, "but we expect it to be a hellofa mess."
