Hunters Dig Up Woolly Mammoth

Many hunters were out after deer on the first day of the season Saturday, but William S. Laughlin, professor of anthropology and John Shiner, Smithsonian Institute archaeologist, were after bigger game.

They found what they were after, eight feet under a farmer's field, 20 miles east of Statton. But it wasn't necessary to shoot the beast. It had died at least 5,000 years ago.

What they found was the remnants of a woolly mammoth. Shiner said that the finding of the bones wasn't important in itself, but if they could establish a connection between the elephant-like creature and man, it would be extremely significant.

More work is being planned to find if there are any Indian artifacts in the same layer of earth as the bones. If there are, it will give strong evidence to the theory that man existed during the time of the mammoth. The tools used are very small, like a trowel or even a brush. The reason for that is the small tools will not disturb the different layers, and each bone or artifact located can be easily placed in time.

Shiner said that they saw quite a few hunters while at the spring where the bones were unearthed and some of them had "found their deer, but we found our mammoth."

Panel Discussion Set for Conference

Panel discussion topics have been assigned to more than 85 high school journalism students who will participate in the Oregon high school press conference to be held on the Oregon campus Oct. 12 and 13.

The conference, which is sponsored by the Oregon Scholastic Press of the University of Oregon School of Journalism, will take place in the Student Union. Registration will begin at 1:30 p.m. Oct. 12.

More than 300 students and their advisers from Oregon High Schools are expected to attend the weekend session which will be largely taken up with panel discussions led by students.

Business and editorial phases of both high school newspapers and yearbooks will be discussed. A program separate from the student panels will be run for advisers.

The conference will close after a noon awards luncheon, Saturday, Oct. 13.

House Managers Discuss Expenses

A discussion on economizing on house expenses highlighted an interfraternity exchange of ideas at the year's first House Manager's association meeting Thursday night in the Student Union.

Data on the best concerns to patronize for everything from meats and fruits to light bulbs and garbage collections was discussed extensively. It was suggested that all fraternities purchase from the same concerns thereby attracting quantity discount, but the measure was defeated with the conclusion that "everyone would buy where they want to buy".

The house managers compared policies on free meals, cooks' salaries, kitchen help and required deposits in hope that uniform policies would better satisfy everyone. Such items as meal expenses were asked for in an effort to get an over-all financial picture.

It was agreed that the association should purchase a page in the 1951-52 Oregonian but lack of necessary finances postponed a decision until the next meeting. The meeting was set for Oct. 18.

Co-rec Night Planned For This Friday

The first Co-Recreation night of the year will be held in Gerlinger hall on Friday, Oct. 5. The Womens Recreation Association is sponsoring this series of recreation nights throughout fall and winter terms.
