Assembly Times Brings Forth Wide Opinion

By Tom Sheperd

Opinion was divided on the question "What do you think of the present plan for holding all student assemblies at 1 p.m.?" Some students felt larger crowds would turn out for morning assemblies while one individual advocated night assemblies.

Norma Latimer—junior in general science—"A good time. Kids will be on their way to campus for classes anyway."

John Weaver—sophomore in physical education—"Better earlier in the day—about 9 or 10 a.m. After lunch, few people will want to leave their room and go to the main part of the campus before regular classes begin."

Kathleen Wisdom—senior in speech—"I like 1 p.m. assemblies. They interfere with classes less."

Loevy Ann Charles—freshman in pre-law—"Better in the afternoons if on Tuesdays or Thursdays, but personally I think evenings would be best time of all, especially for rallies."

Tom Spetz—junior in pre-med—"Not as good as 11 o'clock. A lot of people have to get ready for afternoon class assignments right after lunch."

Harriet Walrath—senior in journalism—"At least everyone's out of bed by 1 p.m."

Diane Flenner—sophomore in foreign languages—"I was one of those people who never did go to assemblies, but if I did I would prefer afternoons."

Chloetta Radcliffe—freshman in liberal arts—"I like afternoon assemblies better. Everyone's more alert and wide-awake."

Glenn Overstreet—sophomore in liberal arts—"It doesn't affect me one way or other. I work and never have time to attend the assemblies."

Frieda Dobbs—junior in sociology—"Not too good an idea. Would get better attendance in the middle of the morning."

Melita Moyer—sophomore in interior design—"The morning assemblies last year made a nice break before noon. Not as many people will want to go to 1 o'clock assemblies—they will want to study for afternoon classes."

Mary Peterson—junior in creative writing—"If students don't have afternoon classes, there's not much incentive to go. There would, however, be less conflict with classes."
