Campus YW, YMCA Heads Win Regional Presidencies

The University of Oregon YW and YMCA's have the distinct honor of having two of their members as regional "Y" presidents for the coming year.

Jackie Wilkes and Dave Hobbs were elected as the regional presidents of their respective organizations at the annual regional student-faculty Y conference at Seabeck, Wash., last summer.

They are chairmen of the regional council which serves as the basic policy making and planning group for all the Y's in the Pacific Northwest, including the states of Idaho, Montana, Washington and Oregon. The council also plans and directs the program emphasis for the Y's in the region.

This past weekend, Miss Wilkes and Hobbs attended a Seabeck planning committee in Portland, the planning of this annual conference being part of their responsibility. They reported that the planning committee was working very enthusiastically on a program which they thought should be of interest to all students who attend.

As part of the program which will affect all the regional Y's, including those at Oregon, Miss Wilkes said that they were setting up committees on effective citizenship in the colleges in the region nearest the state capitals. These committees will channel news of political importance from the state legislatures to the Y's throughout the states.

The regional council will also work on promotion of the World Student Christian Federation and help the various Y's promote, encourage, and carry out the World Student Service Fund drives.

During the past summer, Miss Wilkes and Hobbs attended the National Student council of the YM-YWCA conference in Richmond, Ind., along with Mrs. Gladys Lawther and Paul Keyser, the regional Y directors. This conference formulated plans to be recommended to the regional and local Y's.

Architecture School Enrollment Shows Unexpected Increase

Registration in the School of Architecture shows a slight increase over last spring, according to Dean Sidney W. Little. This comes as a surprise, Little stated, in view of the fact that a considerable drop was feared.

The number of students in the entire School of Architecture and Allied Arts is less than a year ago, but the decrease is substantially less than estimated.

Several factors have operated to hold up the registration, Little explained. Five-year courses, of which there are many in the school, are more stable than four-year courses.

Also, fewer Oregon students are going out of state for instruction. At the same time, more out-of-state students are applying for admission here. The number admitted is vigorously controlled in order not to crowd facilities for Oregon students who come first.

The number of students in landscape architecture has increased also. The department is headed by Frederick A. Cuthbert and is the only one in the Northwest accredited by the American Society of Landscape Architects. The demand for graduates continues to exceed the supply.

Another increase in students occurred in teacher training in art education for elementary schools. This work is under the direction of assistant professor of art education Jean K. Glazer. To take care of these unanticipated increases, Little is requesting additional staff.

Little returned from a three-day meeting of architects of the Northwest region, members of the American Institute of Architects, held in Hood River Sept. 28-30.

The meetings were attended by one hundred and sixty architects who came from Oregon, Washington and Idaho, and represented chapters of the American Institute of Architects in those areas.

Deadline Friday For AFROTC Applications

Additional applications to advanced air force ROTC will be taken until 5 p.m. Friday in the office of the military department on campus.

All students who are interested in making applications and who have had two years of basic courses, or 12 months of armed forces service are eligible to apply under conditional enrollment over and above the initial quota that has been allotted to the University of Oregon AFROTC, according to Maj. N. N. Mihailov, public information officer for the military department.

There are now four different options in the advanced course, Major Mihailov said — administrations and logistics, comptrollership, flight operations and general technical.

Opera 'Golden Slippers' Scheduled for Screen

"Golden Slippers", an opera by Tchaikowsky, will be presented on the screen for a first showing on the campus at 11 a.m. Friday in the audio-visual department of the library. The Russian movie will be shown again at 11 a.m. next Monday. Dialogue is in Russian with English subtitles.
