

How to Carry 28 Hours and Work Discussed by Political Science Major

By Ward Lindbeck

Four years of college and a Master's degree in three years is possible. Bill Lees is doing it.

"It's a lot of work," he said, "but I think I can do it by the end of summer session. I'll graduate at the end of this term."

Lees, a third term senior in political science, is carrying 28 hours this quarter to accomplish his goal. All but five hours are upper division courses. The ten courses he's studying range from an 8 a.m. MWF to a 7-10 p.m. on Wednesday.

Besides this load, the 250-lb., 6'3" student is a member of the USA Steering committee and a bouncer 12 hours a week at Piluso's.

Lees' accumulative GPA is approximately 2.5, which is "deceptive," he said. He played football during his freshman year and his accum was 1.85. But his second year's accum was 3.1.

Texts Are Interesting

"I didn't study much during my first year," the dark-haired student commented. "But at the end of spring term, I opened one of my texts and began reading. It surprised me to find how interesting it was, and since then, I read all my texts."

One of the courses he's taking this term is Political Science 490, an incomplete from spring term. Though he doesn't have to attend any lectures, he has six 500-word papers to write. The incomplete was caused by a two-week trip to Chicago at the beginning of spring term. He was a delegate to the Delta Sigma Rho honorary.

"I work hard," the 24-year-old senior declared. "I do most of my studying between 11 p.m. and 3 a.m., even though I have an 8 o'clock Monday, Wednesday and Friday. I spent five years in the Navy and learned that sleep is of little consequence."

Owning a 700-volume library is a big aid to his late study hours, he said. The school library is used infrequently because his books, dealing mostly with political science, cover all of his needs.

Work as a Bouncer

"Working at Piluso's is often amusing," he said. "Most people think that bouncers and football players are stupid. And that's the way a lot of them treat me."

Lees' plans aren't definite yet. He might enter Law school next year and he estimates it would take two or two-and-a-half years to complete the work. But he's applied for a commission in Naval Intelligence and if that comes through, he'll accept it.

The courses Lees is taking this term are Political Science 490 (the incomplete); Far East Governments, 8 MWF; Family Relations, 11 TuTh; International Organization, 10 MWF; Political Theory, 11 MWF; British Government, 1 MWF; World Politics, 3-4:15 MTu; Seminar in Liberalism, 3-5 Th; Debate, 7-9 Tu; American History of Government, 7-10 p.m.

Exceptional Study Load

Clifford L. Constance, registrar, said that Lees' case is exceptional because the average study load is 15 1/2 hours.

"Students must realize they are responsible for the hours they register for," he cautioned. "Some grade will be given them for every class."

The University abolished its policy of having a maximum and minimum load last year, he said. Many students petitioned for more or less than the requirements for various reasons, and there was no adequate basis on which to judge each case.

"The Academic Requirements committee," the Registrar said, which approved or rejected the student's petitions, had to base their judgment on information given them by the student's advisor, his instructors, and the student. As these are the same people who make out the schedule, it seemed wholly logical to eliminate the petitioning and let the number of hours be decided during the registration process."

Browsing Room Lecture Series To Feature Discussion of Arnold

Alburey Castell, head of the department of philosophy, will present the fifth in the Browsing room lecture series when he talks on "Don't Underestimate Matthew Arnold" at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in the Browsing room of the Student Union.

Castell will discuss Arnold and the humanities, stressing Arnold's England, and his ideas of criticism, culture and literature. He will also discuss Arnold's feeling about the Bible as literature, his thoughts about poetry as literature, and the arguments Arnold has aroused since his time.

Castell came to the University of Oregon in 1949 from the University of Michigan. Previously he had taught at the University of Toronto, Columbia, University of Washington and Purdue.

Arnold was an English poet, literary critic and classical scholar who lived in England from 1882 to 1888. He wrote "Essays in Criticism," "God and the Bible," "Tristram and Iseult" and "Sohrab and Rustram."

Carlisle Moore, associate professor of English, will lead the discussion.

The Browsing room lecture series is free and open to the public. The series is sponsored by the University library, Browsing room committee and house librarians.

Rally Planned Friday

There will be a rally for the Idaho game at 6:30 p.m. Friday in McArthur Court. Ron Symons, rally board chairman, has announced. Details on the rally will be revealed later this week.

Oregon Mothers Plan Fund Drive

Plans to raise $2500 for scholarships were made at the regular fall executive board meeting of the Oregon Mothers club in Portland recently.

The group maintains a loan fund, which now contains more than $15,000, in addition to awarding scholarships. Methods of adding to the fund were also discussed at the meeting.

Proposed plans for raising money include card parties, rummage sales, direct contributions and the sale of life memberships, according to Karl W. Onthank, executive secretary and chairman of the club's scholarship committee.
