

Graduate School Awards Faculty Research Grants

Eight faculty research grants have been announced by the graduate school. Grants are usually made in the spring but are occasionally made at other times during the year.

The graduate school budget provides the money for the faculty members who are given the grants. The ones listed are for 1951-52 and were approved Oct. 30.

Following is a list of the grant recipient, position, and research project:

Edwin R. Bingham, instructor in history; Charles Erskine Scott Wood; Robert D. Clark, assistant dean of the college of liberal arts, biology and Matthew Simpson; Luther S. Cressman, head of department of anthropology, archaeological survey of Oregon coast; Edmund A. Cykler, professor of music, folk songs of Oregon; V. R. Gaertner, assistant professor of chemistry, abnormal reactions of heteroarylmethyl Grignard reagents;

Jean E. Guedenet, assistant professor of romance languages, French literature—the study of a literary review: La Revue Blanche (1891-1903); John James, assistant professor of sociology, an experimental study of some behavioral determinants of small human group size; Frank J. Massey, Jr., assistant professor of mathematics, numerical investigation on a problem in non-parametric estimation.

'Devil and Daniel' Tryouts at 4 Today

Tryouts for the leading singing roles in "The Devil and Daniel Webster," will be held at 4 p.m. today in the music room auditorium.

"The Devil and Daniel Webster" will be one half of the University theater's double bill musical to be produced in April.

Tryouts today will be for Mr. Scratch, a tenor; Daniel Webster, a baritone; Mary Stone, a contralto or soprano; and Jabez Stone, bass.

Read and use Emerald classifications.

Collins to Finish Coastal Survey In Archaeology

Lloyd R. Collins, a research assistant in the anthropology department, will complete an archeological survey of the Oregon coast this month. Collins started his work at the Columbia river in the middle of June, and has worked on the project since that time.

The purpose of the research is to locate archeological sites in the area and recommend for excavation those which seem to be the most important because of the length of time they were used or because they are in danger, either by natural forces (rivers and ocean) or by construction work (real estate development and road building). It is hoped by Collins that extensive excavation will begin in 1952.

The project is under the direction of L. S. Cressman, head of the anthropology department.

Collins has been employed under a grant from the Wenner-Gren fund for anthropological research. A graduate school research grant has provided for costs of travel.

Correction . . .

The photographs of the Phi Sigma Kappa Moonlight Girl finalists, which appeared in Monday's Emerald, were taken by Fehley Studios, not by the Emerald photographer as the credit line read.

DUCK TRACKS

It might interest a certain Oregon student, too. He plans to graduate next spring, but one never knows. He probably has seen enough of the campus. And he has already caught up on those studies that he missed in 1941.

Yes, Jonathan K. Kahananui might not be back at Oregon next fall, but Borchner probably will be, despite the efforts of one anonymous self-styled fan who wrote a letter to the Emerald, stating that he was joining the "Goodbye, Bill Borchner Club," which is a rather startling development since Borchner's Oregon teams have not yet played a game.

University Library Displays 'Life' Atomic Energy Exhibit

"Atomic energy," an exhibit prepared by the editors of Life magazine, will be on display at the University library for two weeks beginning through Saturday.

The first pictures are of seven scientists whose peacetime research led to wartime developments. These are followed by pictures from Hiroshima, Nagasaki and Bikini and experiments with animals, radiation sickness and mutation.

The second section is devoted to postwar developments of atomic power and its implications. A plutonium laboratory, the new California cyclotron and the Oak Ridge atomic plant work in production of radioactive isotopes is shown.

Atomic energy control is taken up in the last section. This involves the world sources of uranium and the use of atomic energy as a weapon of war.

The social and political implications are considered in the last panels. Quotations are from the report on the international control of atomic energy prepared for the Secretary of State.

The thesis of the exhibition is that science is international in scope and that atomic energy is not only a scientific matter but also a social and political problem. These panels also emphasize the practical uses of atomic energy from the layman's point of view.

Deadline for the contest is 5 p.m., Nov. 16. All entries may be turned in to 303 Student Union.

UO Power Fails Monday Afternoon

Power failed briefly on campus Monday afternoon, but the University power plant connected into the city power until the difficulty was overcome, limiting the lack of electricity on campus to a few minutes.

Cause of the failure, according to physical plant Superintendent I. I. Wright, was a lack of fuel, arising when workmen were attempting to start a fuel conveyor chain they had just finished tightening. Pressure evidently decreased, he said, when the fuel began to run out.

The heating and power plan tied into the city power outlet from 2:12 p.m. to 3:45 p.m., a workman said, until the University plant was again providing power.

Off-campus Frosh To Obtain Reports

Eugene freshman students who are living off campus are asked, by the office of student affairs, to obtain freshman mid-term progress report cards at the office in Emerald hall.

The cards must be filled out today so that the teachers of the courses may check the student's progress in the various classes and mail them to the office of student affairs, the office said.

Students living in dormitories have received cards through the dormitories but off-campus freshmen must pick them up at the office of student affairs.
