

Award Given John Valleau

John Valleau, graduate student in journalism, has won a special $25 research award for his master's thesis on the press coverage of the 1951 Oregon legislature, the School of Journalism announced today.

Valleau, who will receive the first master's degree with honors in the journalism school's history, won the research prize from a fund sponsored by T. Neil Taylor, University journalism graduate in 1931.

His thesis was a "tremendously detailed and revealing study of the way the people of Oregon get informed of the activities of their legislative representatives," according to Dean Gordon A. Sabine.

Debators Return With One First

Members of the University forensics squad took one first place and reached the finals in three divisions in competition with 50 colleges and universities from seven states at the western speech association three-day forensics tournament at Fresno State college last week.

Nancy Ann Yates placed first in the women's discussion division and reached the finals in extemporaneous speaking. Leland Johnson also reached the finals in extemporaneous speaking and men's discussion.

Each squad member participated in three of the divisions which included debate, discussion, extemporaneous, impromptu and oratory. Representing Oregon were Miss Yates, Johnson, Don Collin, Harold Newfeld and Doug Ambers, accompanied by Speech Instructor Anthony Hillbruner and graduate assistant Ben Padrow.

The University will send several debate teams to the regional debate tournament of Northwest schools at Gonzaga university in Spokane, Wash. Friday and Saturday Hillbruner said.

Group to Discuss Aristotle's 'Ethics'

Book I of Aristotle's "Ethics" will be discussed by the Great Books Discussion group at 8:15 p.m. Thursday in 319 Student Union.

Students attending the discussion have been asked by the group to read the selection prior to Thursday evening.

The chief works of Aristotle, Greek philosopher (384-322 B.C.) include his "Ethics", "Aesthetics", "Politics", "Metaphysics", and "Poetics". Aristotle, considered one of the great thinkers of history, helped systematize Greek thought, put logic on the plane of a science, and related philosophy to natural science, especially biology.

Opinions Split About Success Of Weekend

By Sue Lichty

Students did not agree on the success of Homecoming this year. Five who were questioned said they believe it to be successful, but four others gave emphatic negative answers.

Some said that the alumni had a good time and the game was a good one. These two things seemed to be the reason many felt it successful. Those disagreeing said that the entire weekend lacked spirit and participation because of conflict with Thanksgiving vacation.

In answer to "Was Homecoming Weekend a success this year?" students answered:

Tottsie Ross—freshman in political science—"Yes. The alums seemed very enthusiastic, and there was a lot of spirit at the game."

Carl Kubin—senior in biology—"No. Everything that was any fun was cut out!"

Ann Strowger—junior in speech—"I think everything went off very well considering the weekend came during Thanksgiving vacation. The committees did a good job."

Mary Sundet—freshman in liberal arts—"I was disappointed in the entire weekend. The bonfire rally, noise parade, and sign contest were poorly managed. Too many people wanted to be home."

Tommy Lekas—senior in business administration—"It was a success even if it was planned at a poor time. I'm sure all of the alums had a good time and the game was good."

Ethel Reeves—freshman in pre-nursing—"The students failed to support Homecoming, but I don't blame them because it came at a bad time."

John Weaver—sophomore in physical education—"It seemed successful to me. I thought the dance and game were fine."

Ann Johnston—freshman in education—"No. It lacked spirit because of Thanksgiving vacation."

Tom Williams—senior in business administration—"Under the conditions, it was a fairly good Homecoming. The dance was good and well decorated."
