Piatigorsky Will Appear Sunday

Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, will be presented by the Civic Music association at 3 p.m. Sunday at McArthur court. Students will be admitted on their student body cards.

Though only 47, Piatigorsky has been making public appearances for almost 40 years. He started lessons at the age of six. A native of Russia, he had played in Moscow by the time he was fifteen and appeared in the U.S. in 1929. His two decades in the U.S. and Canada have included more than 1000 performances, among which are numbered some 250 soloist appearances.

Desiring, for his own enjoyment, to take up some activity in which he would be merely an amateur, Piatigorsky chose English, which he considered his worst field. He hired a secretary and began writing a philosophical novel.

To his surprise the book was accepted by several publishing houses. He is now under contract to Random house, thus removing his amateur status in the field of English.

The internationally-known cellist will perform works by Haydn, Brahms, Chopin, Faure and Saint-Saens and variations composed by himself on a Paganini theme.

Senate to Select New Court Member

A new member of the Student Court will be appointed by the ASUO senate next week, according to Mike Adams, head of the court. This member will fill the vacancy created at the first of this term.

The vacancy was caused by the absence of Jane Slocum from the university this term. Miss Slocum is not back to school due to injuries suffered in an automobile accident, Dec. 31, when going on a ski trip.

Sociological Group Meets January 19

The Pacific Sociological society (Northern division) will meet at Reed college, Portland, on Jan. 19. Faculty members of the University of Oregon's Sociology department will be attending the meeting.

The Pacific Sociological society is a branch of the American Sociological society.

J. V. Berreman, professor of sociology at the University and vice-president of the society, said that the forthcoming meeting will feature two panel discussions. The subject of the first discussion will be, "Should teaching and research be problem-oriented or theory-oriented?"

John James, assistant professor of sociology at University, Frank Parks of Oregon State college and Edward Taylor of Linfield college will take part in the discussion.

Howard Jolly of Reed college will lead a discussion on "The undergraduate curriculum in sociology—what it should contain." Participation in the panel will be Robert Farist of the University of Washington and John Rademaker of Willamette university.

The examination consists of a written test covering accounting and auditing and the ability to conduct correspondence with the public. Veterans are given preference points.
