New Boss of Taylor's Thinks Future Bright

By Bill Frye

Myrl Garnett is optimistic. He also thinks he understands students pretty well. For these reasons he and his wife Florence, a former University employee, have taken over as the new managers of Taylor's coffee shop on a five-year lease.

The building—lock, stock and bottlecap—were turned over to the Garnetts by Hershel Taylor, its owner and a campus businessman for the last 30 years. Built in 1931, the familiar green dispensatory of food and drink is located adjacent to the campus on 13th and Kincaid.

Garnett a Veteran

From the outside, Taylor's still has the same appearance. On the inside, though, it looks considerably different than when students left it after one last round of post-final beers last month.

Garnett, a 53-year-old veteran of both world wars, got real busy after the close of fall term. With the help of his wife, who worked in the physical plant office prior to taking over management of the Veterans' memorial union dining hall seven years ago, Garnett rolled up his sleeves and set about giving his place a complete facelift.

He shucked out about $1000 for labor and materials to get his woodwork sanded and varnished, his walls painted and his floor redone. The three tables and sixteen booths were planed off free of initials and Greek letters and given mahogany and natural finishes.

Fireplace Being Used

The fireplace at one end of the single room is proving its utility—a fire really will burn there. Garnett has a stack of Presto logs handy which he hopes students won't hesitate to use. The gals can rustle fuel too. If they think their bangs have shifted after dumping another log on the fire they can look above the mantle right into a fancy mirror and straighten them out.

To carry out his idea of making Taylor's into "a home away from home where students can come and relax," Garnett is encouraging canasta and bridge players to make use of the tables, and those that just like to sit and talk to do it around the fireplace.

Right now he's serving fountain drinks, ice cream and short orders. His nickel doughnuts are made by himself using a deep-fry method, but he plans to give up the home-made sinkers as soon as his doughnut-making machine is set up.

Regular Meals Scheduled

Regular meals featuring a merchant's lunch are also due for the menu along with the breakfast varieties offered now.

Garnett doesn't think the new law which prohibits him from selling beer will hurt his business much. Actually, he believes, it will help because more of the students will be able to come in. (Technically, Oregon liquor laws prohibited minors from coming into Taylor's before this year.) "I may have less money in the cash register because I can't sell beer," he said, "but I'll have more students in my place."

To meet the needs of his customers, Garnett hires three persons besides himself and his wife. His wife, with the women's navy during World War I, takes care of most of the cooking. Hours of 8 a.m. to 11 p.m. are kept every day.

Mu Phi Epsilon National Officer Here for Initiation

Eleanor Wilson, national first vice-president of Mu Phi Epsilon, music sorority, will attend the meeting of Nu chapter of the women's music group on Friday. Three women, Jean Spicer, Mary Suewada and Joyce Anderson—will be initiated at that time.

Mrs. Wilson is the province governor and is making an inspection tour. An evening buffet supper honoring Mrs. Wilson will be held at the home of Mrs. D. W. Allton, chapter advisor and wife of Donald Allton, associate professor of music.

The buffet will be followed by a musical program featuring Jean Spicer on the oboe, Yvonne Reed on the coronet, Irene Philan singing accompanied by LaVerne Edwards, plus two trios—a vocal trio including Beverle Goheen, Barbara Fulton and Joan McLean; and a strong trio including Dorothy Pederson at the piano, Majorie Carlson on the cello and Sally Lichty on the violin.

Illness Cancels Piatigorsky Recital

The concert by Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, scheduled for 3 p.m. Sunday has been cancelled due to the illness of the artist.

All appearances on this Civic Music association tour were cancelled, according to a wire received from T. M. Alexander, Eugene association president, from the New York headquarters.

It is possible that a substitute concert can be arranged at a later date, depending on what artists are available and the open dates at McArthur court where the concerts are held.
