Good Luck, Mel!

Streeter vs. Guisness For Vital Huskie Tilts

By Martin Meadows

Frankie Guisness's scoring average may take a slight dip next weekend when the basketball squads of the University of Oregon and the University of Washington engage each other in an important two-game series. The reason? Well, bouncing Mel Streeter hopes to utilize his talents in guarding the Husky ace, and if the two-year Duck letterman comes through there's no telling where Oregon may finish in the Northern Division title chase.

Nervous at Home

"I hope to play my best basketball of the year at Seattle," said Streeter, who unaccountably gets nervous when performing before the home crowd and seems to do better in road games. However, this year the 6-foot 3½-inch athlete has looked much improved over the last two years and has finally broken into the starting line-up.

Mel, who hails from Los Angeles, is a senior in Architecture and hopes to graduate in June, 1953. However, before graduating he would like to play a little football for Len Casanova next fall. He played End at Riverside High School in California and made the

All-Southern California squad at that position. His opponents in high school included All-Americans Bill McColl of Stanford and Johnny Olsewski of California.

Showing his versatility, Mel also participated in track and set a high jump record for his school when he soared 6'4". This ability adds a spectacular touch to his basketball performances, especially on the backboards. In addition, Mel likes to play tennis and is a better-than-fair player at the sport.

Likes Northwest

While attending Riverside Junior College, Mel received numerous offers to attend various colleges, but choose Oregon because of its nationally-known architecture school, and also because he is interested in the Northwest. After he graduates he may settle down in Seattle.

"I intend to stay in the games from now on," Streeter claimed, referring to the unenviable record he set recently when he fouled out of seven straight games during the team's recent trip through California. Mel attributes this to closer calls by the southern referees, explaining that less aggressive basketball is played there.

As for the trip itself, Mel enjoyed it very much and says that he preferred it to a barnstorming trip to the East and Midwest. However, he hinted pointedly that in the future the team should travel by other means other than bus, as he is allergic to long trips and breakdowns of the bus while on the road.

In Mel's opinion, Head Basketball Coach Bill Borchers is a top-flight mastermind, and in addition has the knack of getting the most out of his talent and instilling confidence in his players. Borchers' habit of playing Dixieland jazz in the team's dressing rooms during games helps relax the squad members, but Mel thinks that the team would be even more relaxed if they had no studies to worry about. We'll go along with that, but conference rules would probably not allow such an action.

New Rule Aids Defense

Concerning the Northern Division experiment of allowing two free throws when the defense commits a foul, Mel pointed out that it has had the effect of aiding the defensive side of the game, as can be seen in the lower scores of the conference games so far.

"I'll be content with first place," Mel grinned, "but we'll really need some good breaks to do that." The breaks would help, but what would be even more welcome would be to see Mel Streeter play the basketball of which he is potentially capable. If he does, he may be the spark to lead the Oregon squad to a season which at least would equal that of last year's second-place finish in the Northern Division.

UW Team Next For Hoopsters

The Oregon basketball team rested last weekend after the grueling period of eight games played in a 13 day period, and will return to the maple boards Monday night for practice sessions in preparation for the Friday and Saturday tilts with the University of Washington Huskies at Seattle.

Also, Coach Don Kirsch's JV-frosh will return to action Friday night with the first of a six game series against the OSC JV's Huskies Top OSC.

The Huskies swept a two game series with the OSC Beavers this weekend, but did not look overly impressive in the process. And they played without the services of their star center, Bob Houbregs, who will probably miss the Oregon series as well.

Nevertheless, Washington will be the top-heavy favorites over the Ducks, by virtue of their roster loaded with such stars as Frank Guisness, all-Northern Division se-

Stellar Webfoot

THE SKY is the limit when springy legged Mel Streeter starts to jump. The six-foot, three-inch senior forward is in the starting lineup for Bill Borchers' Webfoots, and has scored 82 points in 14 games for a 5.8 average.

Aquaducks Down Aero Clubbers; High-schooler Takes Top Honors

The Men's Pool was the scene of a lot of action Saturday as the Aqua-Ducks came from behind in the final stages of a meet with the Aero Club of Portland, downing the latter 38-28.

The Aero-Clubbers, although giving away quite a bit to the Ducks in age and experience, nevertheless managed to put together a narrow 28-26 lead prior to the final two events.

The Webfoots, led by Jim Allan, Yosh Terada, and Milt Kotoshiroda in the 180-yard medley relay, and by Henry Kaiura, Dave Houck, Harry Fuller, and Kotoshiroda in the 160-yard free-style relay, captured the final two features and with them the match.

An outstanding performance was turned in by Bob Gregson, a 15-year-old freshman from Longview high school who won both the 100 yard breaststroke and the 200 yard freestyle and placed second in the 100 yard freestyle. On the strength of this showing Gregson took individual honors for the meet.

An impressive exhibition of diving was given by Oregon's Pete Charlton, whose performance rated 38 out of a possible 40 points.
