Weatherman Says No Snowballs Yet

Californians who came north expecting to find a winter wonderland in Oregon will just have to wait. The snow which began falling Saturday night won't even amount to a good snowball, according to the weatherman.

He said Sunday that snow flurries will continue today and tonight but that warm temperatures and a smattering of rain will keep it from amounting to any more than a thin, slushy blanket.

Heavy snows have hampered traffic in some parts of the state, but the Willamette valley is scheduled to get nothing more than its normal quota of precipitation, with rain predominating.

The forecast for the Eugene area calls for slightly cooler temperatures with a high of 37 degrees predicted for today and a low of 28 tonight. Low for the last 24 hours was 30.

State police said that heavy snows have closed the Ashland-Klamath Falls highway and drifts on Highway 30 near LaGrande have threatened traffic in that area.

Third Time? It Could Be The Charm

The phone rang in the lobby of Carson hall, women's dormitory. E. H. Byrne, the night watchman answered it.

"No, I'm sorry it isn't," he said and hung up.

"Some fellow thought he was calling Piluso's," Byrne explained.

The phone rang about two minutes later. Same fellow still looking for Piluso's.

Bill Bowerman's Medford High grid elevens won 64 games, lost 8, and tied 3.
