ASUO class council, he pointed out, but it could be there remedied by requiring men and women both to serve on the council, if enough women hold office.

Another suggestion, he said, is for the presidential and vice-presidential balloting to be completely independent of the representative balloting. Still another remedy possible is for the ballot-counters to redistribute all ballots after the numbers "1" and "2" to representative candidates.

system allows the freshmen to gain more acquaintances and to "look over" the fraternities. However, he did not like the fall term "hands off" fraternity policy.

Those students who did not participate in rushing had no comment on the subject.

Several freshmen stated that the orientation program had assisted them at the beginning of the school year. "It helped me know where I was going," one remarked. The short tour of campus fraternities also drew favorable comment.

System Favored

Living in dorms separate from upperclassmen provides the freshmen the "advantage" of being together as a class," according to one freshman. Others either favored the system or had no comment.

Better Without Upperclassmen
When the freshmen lived with upperclassmen during previous years, according to one first-year Vets' dormer, the upperclassmen "sorta ran the roost."

However, he admitted that the older students might be quieter than the frosh, and another student remarked that living with upperclassmen might have helped "to tone the place down some."

Only one of the interviewees felt that intramural sports should not be segregated on the basis of freshman and non-freshman teams. However, almost all of them stated that social functions should be "mixed," including upperclass students.

The interviewed freshmen unanimously indicated that they do not "feel isolated from the rest of the school," but there was one exception—car rallies with sororities.

"We just didn't exist to them," one remarked. When the boys went to pick the girls up, another explained, the girls "wouldn't show up."

began came in for criticism by a number of those interviewed. Many thought the program could have been carried out in three days instead of the five used. Seeming lack of organization was noted by some and the speeches were criticized as being too long and boring. Several said they would have liked hearing more student speakers and thought the program should have used more students as was done at the student leaders' assembly and the frosh picnic.

Tour Needed

In commenting on how the program acquainted freshmen with the campus, one said, "The only thing I got acquainted with was Mac court." One expressed a need for tours of the campus to orientate freshmen.

In spite of the criticism, many said that without the program, they would have been completely lost and thought it was a good idea.

Separation of freshmen from the other classes came in for discussion during the interviews. Most thought it was a good idea to have the freshmen separated from the upper classmen as the dorm rules for them are different than for freshmen. A few said that it kept the freshmen from meeting the upper classmen and thought the freshmen could be helped in their studies by the older women.

Want Upperclass Social Functions

The freshmen liked the idea of having their social functions, desserts and exchange dinners, just with the freshmen men. "It gets us acquainted with our classmates," one said. However, they did think there should also be exchanges with upperclassmen. One said if the freshman dance had been all-campus, it would have been more successful.

"Freshmen can be a part of the campus if they make an effort to get into things," said one freshman when questioned as to whether she felt the freshmen were isolated from the campus. Several seemed to think that it depended entirely on the individual and that freshmen were given many chances to get into activities and make social contacts.

While on campus freshmen seem to be a part of activities, several did admit that in the dorm they were cut off from the campus. Some said they didn't feel a part of school functions as they were not allowed to attend all games and other functions during the week and felt they were kept in too much. Others said that they didn't mind this too much, however, since they would be given those privileges when they became upperclassmen.
