Selective Service Cooperates
 Hawk talked briefly on student relation to the military situation. "The University has secured marvelous cooperation from selective service boards throughout the state and in adjoining states," he declared. The boards have taken national directives, suggesting deferment of college students until completion of their education, to heart, he said.

"Practically all men now in college will have an opportunity to complete school," Hawk asserted. The ROTC program and the standards set up by selective service for temporary deferment on the basis of grade standings will allow most students to escape the draft, he explained.

These programs will not aid the approximately 20 per cent of freshman men who flunked out of school during their first year, Hawk said.

Jones Stresses Difficulty
 W. C. Jones, dean of administration, told the dads that the situation in higher education is going to become more difficult in the coming year, due to decreasing enrollment and budget cuts.

Jones predicted $300,000 less income from student fees in the next academic year and a budget cut of about $100,000 for the University of Oregon. Oregon's faculty will not be reduced by the budget cut, Jones said earlier.

Parent-faculty advisor meetings during Dad's Day weekend to discuss scholastic progress of individual students was suggested to the group by one dad and referred to the executive committee for investigation.

Onthank said the plan had been tried before with no great demand, but that the office of student affairs would aid in directing parents to faculty advisors for such discussions.

 known." He said that legal violator be an official of a campus political party.

Petitions for council positions would be submitted to the deans of the students' schools. The deans would make recommendations on the petitioners and submit names of non-petitioners if they so desired.

The honor committee would then select members from the petitions and recommendations.

Representation from the college of liberal arts and at least two professional schools would be mandatory.

President Appoints Faculty
 The two faculty members on the council would be appointed by the University president.

Students could be removed from council positions for (1) scholastic deficiencies, (2) violations of the University discipline code or (3) malpractice in performance of duties.

Also discussed in the Saturday afternoon meeting was punishment for cheating. Suggestions ranged from just a warning for first violators to a flunk in the examination involved.

Prevention Emphasized
 However, committee members agreed that an honor system, if established here, should emphasize preventive rather than punitive action.

The senate committee members have been talking with other groups concerning their proposed system. The two faculty committee members, E. G. Ebbighausen, chairman, and E. R. Bingham, talked with members of the faculty senate last Wednesday on an "exploratory level." Four committee members also met with the student discipline committee last week.

Today the proposed plan will be brought before the University board of deans.

The committee—appointed fall term by the ASUO president to investigate the possibility of an honor system at Oregon—will soon begin to write its final report for the ASUO senate.

basketball games are carried over the state by radio, student leaders should make an effort to control the booing in the interests of the University reputation.

He was answered by a dad who declared that most of the booing came from persons other than students, and the matter was dropped.

The Dad's Day club approved three minor revisions in the club's constitution. Approved were measures for electing five dads to the executive committee each year, allowing heads of local Dad's clubs to serve on the executive committee, and raising the annual membership fee from $1 to $2.

The group also accepted a provision stating that any man whose grandchild is a student at the University is automatically an honorary member of the Oregon Dad's.

Students, Faculty of Highest Quality

 crease, Oregon has been able to correct a poor faculty-student ratio that existed after the war. Due to a decrease in enrollment and no major staff eliminations, the ratio is now very good, Byrne said.

In commenting on the decrease in enrollment, Byrne stated that even now the number of students is 25 per cent greater than the highest enrollment before the war. He predicted that about 1956 enrollment will probably be double the present number of students.

Opportunities for Students
 Byrne commented on the fact that college students who graduate within the next ten years are graduating at a fortunate time. Since there is a serious shortage in professional areas and that in the fields of engineering and science, the country faces a deficit of 100,000 a year.

Following Chancellor Byrne's address, William Jones, dean of administration, gave the assembled students and dads greetings from University president H. K. Newburn who is in Europe studying education systems.

Johnson Concludes Program
 Concluding the luncheon program was Eldon Johnson, dean of the college of liberal arts, who gave the assembly a brief sketch of the University's new science building which is to be dedicated April 25.

During the luncheon, the students and dads heard Bill Carey, ASUO president, give the dads official welcome on behalf of the students. Greetings to the dads were also expressed by Mrs. Glen Porter on behalf of the Oregon Mother's club.

Bently introduced Mrs. Cy Newman Dads Day hostess and the other two finalists, Mrs. Arthur Ingham and Mrs. Jerry Moshofsky.

You can help lock the door against cancer

This is a story about a door and two keys. The story will have more point if, first, we state three facts:

- Every 3 minutes an American dies of cancer.
- 25% of those who die could have been saved.
- Many cancers can be cured—if detected in time.

Now here is the story. A door can be built to repel this deadly killer, but the door locks only if two keys are turned. Science holds one key. Your money can provide the other.

Your dollars support cancer research which some day may find the causes and cure of the disease. Your money supports an education program that teaches men and women how to recognize cancer in its early stages, when immediate treatment can save their lives.

Won't you help us lock the door? Give as generously as you can. Give more than before. Give to guard those you love.
