planned, pushing the proposed budget still higher when lean enrollment years are expected. (ASUO budget money comes from student fees.)

Two points in the honor code report, printed in the Emerald Feb. 26, 27 and 29, were altered.

The honor code and court committee, the senate-appointed group which will continue the honor code orientation program if adopted by the students, will recommend members of the student court to the ASUO president—not to the senate as was originally planned.

And the student court, which will be enlarged to seven members to hear cases of code violations, will not have faculty members.

A report by the chairman of the senate committee investigating the primary election plan indicated a final report may come, "possibly the second week in spring term."

Appointments made Thursday and at the Feb. 27 senate meeting included: Mother's Day chairman, Joan Lawson, sophomore in liberal arts; new student court members, Fred Turner, junior in liberal arts, and Sally Haseltine, sophomore in liberal arts.
