USA PRESIDENTIAL ASPIRANTS SAY--

'Not Supporting Honor Code...'

By Don Collin

It should be clearly stated that I stand apart from the field of presidential candidates in that I am not actively helping the honor code orientation program. I have refrained because of a lack of supporting evidence in the honor code report that would point out how the system would achieve desired results.

Last Mar. 6 in the Senate I stated that the report failed to indicate what factors make for a successful honor system at other schools and failed further to indicate that these factors exist on the University of Oregon campus.

Actually the report leaves the success of the honor code to the wholehearted support of the students. The latest poll of 251 students showed that 82 per cent agreed with the principles of an honor code as they understood them. Yet when asked specifically about the Oregon situation, only 48 per cent wanted to abolish proctoring and institute an honor system. On the matter of cheating, 36 per cent felt the honor code would have a neutral effect or increase cheating. These latter figures do not indicate wholehearted support.

Perhaps I stand apart from the other candidates on the issue of an all-campus primary. I worked in the Senate committee and will continue to work for the open primary. Only in this way will a more direct democratic method be found in choosing candidates and lining up political parties on political issues.

'We Need Honesty...'

By Jim Haycox

In point of service or service activities, I guess you could say—as one person implied Friday—that I am "inadequately prepared" to run for anything but cover. If I thought that was true, and I don't, I wouldn't have done this thing.

I think anybody who has a fair intelligence, who can speak in two-syllable words and who believes the ASUO president's job is important enough to fight for is probably qualified. That includes more people than ever get to smell the roses.

And I think anybody who believes themselves "da peoples choice" should know what the people choose. By that, I mean some sort of platform.

I think if people realized upwards of $400 was spent foolishly this year in the limited ASUO budget, they would be kicking harder than they are now. I think they would agree the president and his secretary could get along with less money and that if a bunch of ASUO senators want to have a banquet ($175 budgeted for this) they can pay for it themselves.

Sure, I am also for development of the Millrace, and for getting pay phones out of dorms, and for trying out an honor code (because no one has yet proved how it can hurt us to try it) and for a lot of things... that all boil down to this.

Any student government made up of people whose ideals go beyond the confines of voting in a block and attempts to keep the dormitories disorganized (because they could be the political rulers of the campus if they choose to be) would be a good student government. Any willing to try something new once in awhile (like NSA or the primary and presidential convention plan) would be all right. Any government that worried more about doing a job than staying in power next year would be fine.

And finally, any governing body that professed honesty (who doesn't?) and then went on to prove it... that one would be best of all. And that's what I think about most when the conversation turns to politics and government.

Honesty is the most overworked word in the English language, but let's use it again. For we need it right now worst of all.

'Cut the President's Salary...'

By Herb Cook

I believe that experience, ability, and scholarship should be the criteria of selecting the student body president instead of party propaganda.

The ASUO budget is one of the most debated and contested topics.

Here I believe the ASUO Senate should sponsor a fund-raising project to help defray the expense of the student body, similar to the one two years ago that Barry Mountain proposed, which was called "Sports Night." It was not too successful but I believe he did not start planning for it until too late in the year. Also, I would welcome a cut in the student body president's salary, if I were elected, as one way of cutting down the expenses.

I would work wholeheartedly to bring about a closer working arrangement with the Student Union board. I realize that the two groups (ASUO Senate and Student Union board) are independent of one another, but still on some projects they could be more closely knit.

I am 100 per cent in favor of the honor code, which I will help to promote because I believe it will benefit all the students immensely.

The work on the Millrace will possibly be started this year or during summer vacation. If the bonds are approved by the city council, and they do not provide enough capital for the Millrace flow and Millrace park, the students should help to defray the additional costs.

The deplorable telephone situation in the dorms should be pushed and given as much publicity to gain their objectives as did the fraternities and sororities. This should be the first step of the ASUO Senate next year if the pay phones are not taken out this year.

The freshman class election should be held fall term, but late in the term to enable the freshmen to get better acquainted with the possible candidates.

I believe all the students should be represented; therefore, the married students should have a seat on the Senate. Also the traffic court should be given or assigned more tasks.

I am also in favor of the fraternities' adopting "Hell to Help Week" in their initiations.

May God help the best man win and the selecting be made on his past record.

Pi Sigma Alpha To Elect Officers

Oregon's chapter of Pi Sigma Alpha, political science honorary, will elect new officers, initiate eight new members Sunday, and follow with a banquet.

The eight are Meredith Burch, senior in general social science; Mohammed Chaudhri, graduate in political science; Geogianna Mills, junior in political science; Young Jen, graduate in political science; Leland Johnson, senior in business administration; Kaare Sandegren, special student in political science; Lyle Shibley, graduate in education; and Nancy Ann Yates, junior in political science.

The initiation will be held in the alumni lounge in the second floor of Gerlinger hall at 5 p.m. Nomination and election of president, vice-president and secretary-treasurer and the banquet at Sweden House Smorgasbord will follow.

Banquet arrangements are being handled by Carson Moore, senior in liberal arts; initiation ritual by Frank Neuber, graduate in political science; speaker contacts by Toby McCarroll junior in liberal arts; table arrangements by Ellen Christiansen, senior in political science; and physical arrangements by Morris Sahr, graduate in general studies.

This year was Pi Sigma Alpha's first on campus.

Women Offered Sorority Award

Applications for the Delta Delta Delta scholarships are now available in the office of Mrs. Golda P. Wickham, director of women's affairs, in Emerald hall.

An incoming junior and incoming senior will each be awarded $350 by the sorority on the basis of scholarship and need. The scholarships are awarded annually. Money for them is earned through baby sitting by members of the organization.

All applications must be returned to Mrs. Wickham's office by 4 p.m. Monday, April 21.

Honoraries Offer Financial Grants

Scholarships are now being offered by Kwama and Phi Theta Upsilon, sophomore and junior women's honoraries.

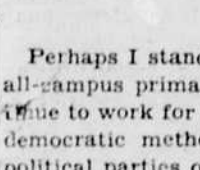

Applicants for the scholarships, whose amounts are undetermined, must fill the following requirements to be eligible for consideration: financial need, scholarship, campus interest and desire to continue school.

Applicants for the Kwama scholarship must be women of freshmen standing and Phi Theta applicants must be women students of sophomore standing.

Application blanks may be obtained from Mrs. Golda Wickham, director of women's affairs or Mrs. Karen McCumsey, secretary of scholarships, at the office of student affairs. Applications are due today. They are to be turned in to Joan Marie Miller and Jody Greer, Pi Beta Phi.

Minneapolis Choir To Present Program

The A Cappella choir and the concert band of Northwestern schools in Minneapolis, Minn., will be stopping over on tour in Eugene tonight at 8 p.m. in The First Baptist church at Broadway and High. Directed by W. B. Bernsten, the group will present a festival of sacred music. Admission is free.
