

Warren Tells Ideas...

ing to solve the problems of our country. They can be solved only through the people of America, he stated.

Too Much Laxity
Warren contended that there is too much laxity and corruption in the present national government, and that this unfaithfulness toward the public trust can be changed overnight by a new approach, one which cuts down on the secrecy now present in government.

"The Democratic administration has been negligent" in allowing subversives to remain in government, Warren asserted. He attributed this condition to the attempts of the Democratic party to appease extreme right and left wing elements, thus permitting "people of strange beliefs" to hold government offices. The Republicans, he said, "have never been bedeviled by a segment of the left," and would eliminate the subversives, because they do not tolerate them.

'Who Are the Subversives?'
Asked in the question session who the subversives would be in the federal government, Warren said he did not and could not say subversives are in the government—that is the job of the FBI and the administration. But he said, they have been shown to be there by their own admissions and by decisions of courts.

Elimination of them from government, he pointed out, should not be through charges against the government in general as subversive, against any group, or against any individual, since this is not "good Americanism".

Deplored Official's Statement
Warren deplored the statement he said was made by an assistant attorney general of the United States in court during the dispute over President Harry Truman's seizure of the steel industries, the statement that the president has a right above and beyond the Constitution to act. When asked by a judge if this would include the power over man's life, Warren said the assistant answered, "I'll have to think that one over."

If such a philosophy goes too far, Warren cautioned, the spirit will be gone from our institutions, we will be without a government of checks and balances and of laws. A government of "one man's desires" will be in force, he said.

Against Large Debt
Warren emphasized that if the process of an increasingly large national debt continues, we will be faced with "a day of reckoning." We can save billions of dollars for us and for our obligations abroad, he said.

Queried about UMT, Warren said he favored military preparedness to protect against the certain attack on the United States in the event of a third world war. But, he nominees) would be run alphabetically, and that the second, third, fourth (and so on) preferences would be alternated by party.

"If the AGS candidate were placed first and the USA candidate second, then the third person on the ballot would be the second choice of AGS and the fourth person (the second choice of) USA," he explained.

No Voter Hindered
Referring to charges that voting booths were not open for the exact time specified by the ASUO constitution, he said most were open for a few minutes before and after 8 p.m. and 6 a.m. with "the important part being that no voter was hindered in voting."

"Apparently no one was kept from voting at either Amazon Flats or Skinner's Butte," he added, noting that the petition, referring to those to polling areas, made no specific mention of what 'irregularities' they meant."

said, he favors four months of basic training for young men, followed by national guard or organized reserved duty while living at home as a civilian, as opposed to the Pentagon's program of one year of UMT.

Other Queries Answered
Also asked in the question period was: How can we reduce the size of government in such a way to provide a drop in taxes? Warren replied that he could not promise an immediate reduction of taxes, but that, through reorganization and a better job of housekeeping, the growth of government can be made to fit a pattern, thus eliminating waste.

Warren said that he could not tell what military expenditures should be in terms of dollars, but that equipment is needed, according to such men as Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's chief of staff in Europe. The only hope of the free world is cooperation, he contended, and it is from that cooperation that collective security flows. He said it is our business to help other nations as much as possible without wrecking our own economy.
