Building Grounds Near Completion

The landscaping around the new science building has reached the seeding stage, according to I. I. Wright, superintendent of the physical plant. Grass will be planted within the next week, and the area may be green by the end of the term.

In addition to grass, the building will be bordered by a row of azaleas and evergreens, which will form a yellow and green pattern. Junipers and barberries will be used.

The center bed near the main entrance to the science building will contain a mass of barberries.

The area around the Friendly parking lot is being replanted with rhododendrons and evergreens. Most of the flowers in the area will bloom next year, but according to H. R. Sebold, assistant professor of architecture who planned the landscaping, the full effect of the plants will not be reached for about four years.

Other possible landscaping projects on the campus are the area between Straub hall and the tennis courts, the area around the new Commonwealth building at 13th and Kincaid streets and the area of the journalism and architecture buildings. No dates have been set for these.

Course Tests Nurse Aptitude

Non-credit courses will be held early this summer at the Portland Medical school to give college students a chance to test their nursing aptitude through supervised experience in the care of patients.

Classes to prepare students to do simple procedures for patients and actual hospital experiences will be stressed during each week-long session.

Sections still open to students are Section II, June 25 to July 2, and Section III, July 6 to 12. Room rent will be $5.60 with no meals furnished. Students must provide a write uniform to wear on duty.

For further information concerning application forms, students may write Olive Slocum, Nursing Education office, Room 321, Chapman, or phone extension 578.

Ebbighausen Conducts Telescope Preview

A group of students and Emerald reporters were treated to the first views through the telescope on the new science building observation roof Wednesday night.

Although visibility was not entirely clear, E. G. Ebbighausen, associate professor of physics, was able to focus the 15-inch mirror telescope for a fairly good view of Mars, Saturn—complete with rings and several moons—and stars in several constellations.

Ebbighausen plans an "open house" sometime in the future to give interested students a chance to view through the telescope.

Students Urged To Attend Meet In Washington

Students who would like to attend the Student-Faculty conference at Seaback, Washington, June 14 to 21, are urged to contact Nan Mimnaugh, YWCA conference chairman, for registration information.

Heading the Oregon delegation to the conference, which will also include meetings of the Northwest Regional YM and YWCA, will be Jackie Wilkes and Dave Hobbs.

Double Honors

Miss Wilkes and Hobbs share double honors in having been elected the regional presidents of their respective organizations at the Seaback conference last June and will serve in these capacities during the conference. Hobbs was Oregon YM president this past year and Miss Wilkes will be Oregon YW president this year.

Alburey Castell, head of the Oregon philosophy department, will be among the faculty members at the conference. Keynoting the conference will be Miss Leila Anderson, national executive of the YWCA.

The program will include discussion groups on practical life and campus problems, talks by Miss Anderson on "The Message and Meaning of the Christian Faith for Life Today," talks and discussions on "The Ethics of marriage and family life, human rights and freedom, civic life and national politics, international relations and vocation choice and work" by Paul Poling, minister of the First Presbyterian church in Salem, and workshops on a number of phases of college religious activity and service.

Registration for the conference is due June 1 and the cards may be obtained from Miss Mimnaugh at the Y headquarters in Gerlinger.

This will be the 18th consecutive conference held at Seaback.
