

Duck Tracks

By Larry Cahn

Sports Editor, The Stanford Daily

(Ed. Note: At the request of the Emerald, Sports Editor Larry Cahn of The Stanford Daily, Stanford's campus newspaper, has written a guest Duck Tracks. Subject: Stanford.

PALO ALTO, Calif.—When the Ducks invade Stanford stadium Saturday they are going to meet a tribe of Indians who are fighting mad. In case the word has not reached the Northland as yet, Stanford was humiliated last weekend at the hands of USC, 54-7. The Injuns are hell bent for revenge.

However with California, the traditional rival, on tap the 22nd of November, the question is whether the Cards can climb from the dumps to drop Oregon or whether they won't be high until they meet the Bears. Coach Chuck Taylor's problem this past week has been to tell his boys that Oregon can be tough, despite their poor showing this year. How successful Chuck has been won't be known until Saturday.

Many down here feel that the Cards don't have to be "up" for your squad. The coaching staff is not overlooking the Oregon potential and we feel that the same footballers who took such a severe lesson from the Trojans last week will want to do a bit of teaching on their own part Saturday.

Passing Their Forte

This year the mainstay of the Indian attack has been the passing of Bob Garrett to ends Sam Morley and John Steinberg with an occasional toss to Halfback Ron Cook and the long one to Bob Mathias, Decathlon champ who likes to outrun the secondary.

However, Garrett injured his shoulder in the USC game and just how effective Bob will be is questionable. There are other injuries. Chuck Essegian and Ron Eadie, defensive men, are doubtful; Bill Rogers, halfback, Bob Hoegh, defensive end and Mathias himself with bruised ribs are question marks. They can all be used if necessary, but we must admit that Oregon has been "sitting Ducks" for so many this fall that many believe Stanford can knock them off operating on four cylinders. And that no matter how much we say we aren't, or try not to, the Injuns are pointing for the Bears and there's no getting around it. We must be healthy when we travel to Berkeley.

A surprise in the Stanford attack this year has been the running game. The Cards were not supposed to have it on the ground and yet with backs Mathias, Skip Christ, Ron Cook, Charlie Brazel, and Rogers, the Indians have looked impressive running.

The Experts Wrong?

Before mid-season setbacks, observers who are supposed to know of such things, called the Indians a better-balanced club than the one which went to the Rose Bowl last year and the one that you saw squeak by your eleven in the opener up in Portland, 27-20, last year.

Believe us when we say the Cards have weaknesses; in fact they are loaded with them. The defensive line has not looked at all sharp since the Santa Clara opener. The defensive backfield had been knocking down and picking off aerals with consistency until USC spotted a weakness and bombed the Indians to death with long, long TD passes. Perhaps your boy Shaw will find the same weaknesses, if so it could be a long afternoon for the hosts.

Tackling has not been all it should be by a long way. Neither has the blocking. Stanford has looked like the defending champs in only one game, that against your Oregon State neighbors when they made the trek to Palto Alto only to be blitzed by a fine display of football. The Indains could make no mistakes, the Beavers made quite a few.

The Indians are still operating off a straight T. Against USC Taylor used a few deviations but all went for naught. Chuck also unveiled some new plays which were cute and were somewhat effective but if we don't need them you can bet your bottom dollar that they will be saved for brother Bear. Perhaps by now you have gotten the idea that whatever we say, we must bring in California.

Indians Level For Bears

That's true. The Stanford-Cal rivalry can be compared to your feud with the Beavers. We haven't beaten the Berkeleyites since 1946 and a win over them would make this year even more successful than last year's Rose Bowl effort. Although you may be pointing somewhat for the Beavers, Stanford is an institution which everyone loves to knock off, especially when you travel all the way from Eugene.

The Cards this Saturday may be compared to a gentleman hosting his mother-in-law; not bubbling with enthusiasm over her arrival and anxious to repel her as soon as possible with little trouble and yet making sure she doesn't want to come back in a hurry.

And yet Oregon could well be the mother-in-law who visits and completely takes over. Please spare us that. We do play California next week.

Ted Anderson, Halfback, Holds Unique Honor

By Al Peters

Emerald Sportswriter

Everyone has heard of all-American, all-coast, all-state, etc. The varsity football team has one player that is none of these but does have a very unique distinction. In high school this player was unanimously selected "All-Newport", according to a not-too-reliable source.

The possessor of this distinction is none other than halfback Ted Anderson, a junior from Newport, Oregon. He received two varsity letters while playing halfback for Newport high school.

Ted is playing his second year of varsity ball for Oregon. He is a business major, interested in working in retail merchandising and buying after graduation. The Air Force has different plans for Ted though. As far as they are concerned he can go into any field he wants, but not before he has served two years with them.

Besides football, Ted runs the 440 on the track team. His leisure time activities include hunting, fishing, tennis, golf and participating in almost every sport. He is a member of Alpha Tau Omega.

He picked California's Johnny Olszewski, Bill Powell and Don Johnson, and Nebraska's Bobby Reynolds as the four best offensive backs Oregon has played this year. UCLA's Moomaw and Dowd are considered by Ted to be two of the roughest players on the coast. Ted found the best defensive team to be the University of Washington.

The only nickname Ted can remember having is "Rockhead", donated by former coach, Jim Aiken.

Ducks Meet Cards

Brethauer needs to catch 12 passes to tie both the three-year national receiving mark and the record for one season. Bill McColl of Stanford holds the career standard of 106 catches and Washington State's Ed Barker tops the list for receptions in one season with 46. Both marks were set in 1951.

Bob Leter, senior defensive halfback, is on the Webfoot traveling squad for the Stanford trip. Although not a first-stringer, Leter has nevertheless stuck it out purely for the love of the game. He is one of the hardest workers on the squad and has never let down.

The Oregon-Stanford rivalry dates back to 1900 when the Indians trounced the Webfoots 34-0. There has been a total of 20 games played between the two schools with Stanford winning 15 and the 1936 tilt ending in the only tie, 7-7. Stanford has scored 390 points to Oregon's 180.

Kirsch, Guest Picker, Predicts Idaho Victory

Head Baseball Coach Don Kirsch, this week's guest selector, has picked Idaho, California, Southern California, and Michigan State to win their respective games this weekend with Oregon State, Washington State, Washington and Notre Dame.

The Emerald predictions show Stanford over Oregon; Oregon State over Idaho; California over Washington State; USC over Washington; and Michigan State over Notre Dame.

The "special" prognosticators, members of the athletic department, still hold a lead over the best picker on the Emerald sports staff. Behind the guests, who hold a .815 mark, comes Sports Editor Larry Lavelle with 75 percent.
