From Abarr to Zweigart—that's this year's Pigger's Guide, which goes on sale today in the Student Union and co-op for 50 cents.

(Ed. note: Abarr and Zweigart are the students who have the distinction of beginning and ending the directory of university students.)

The Pigger's Guide, the much-thumbed campus handbook published annually, contains the names, major and year, telephone numbers and home and campus addresses of all students enrolled in the university.

Kept a secret until publication, the cover of this fall's Pigger's Guide was designed by Donna Covalt, senior in journalism. On the light blue cover is a sketch of the original freshman "pigger," his girl and the prize-winning pig that required Saturday night attention.

Campus Who's Who

The campus "who's who" gets its name from the Oregon term of—"anyone who dates." According to the poem on the index page of the "book", pigging started when a shy UO freshman, Homer, claimed he had to visit his pig every weekend, rather than brave the teasing of his friends about a girl friend.

Thus began the tradition of Homer's going "pigging" when he took his girl out.

Topping the rest, "Smith" finds itself listed in the Pigger's Guide 41 times. A graduate student in education from Thailand, Sumanie Chaisittiyudhaparn, takes honors for one of the longest "John Henry's" in the guide.

Guide Is Directory

The Pigger's Guide, which serves as a directory for any and all campus information, includes special sections listing living organizations, their presidents and social chairmen; names and officers of campus groups and honoraries, KWAX and publication staffs and ASUO and class officers.

Found also among its 100 pages is a faculty directory, schedules of term final examinations, a buyer's guide, UO faculty committees, social calendar for the year and traditions and songs of the campus.

Ads Amount to $1000

Over $1000 of advertising helped to finance the Pigger's Guide, according to Jim Shea, business manager of the student directory. Eighty-five ads were taken in the book by Eugene and Springfield firms.

Editor Patricia Choat was assisted by Bob Ford and Mary Ann Moore, associate editors, Julie Gunnell, index editor, Janet Bell, information editor, Donna Covalt, art editor, and Jean Lewis and Stephanie Scott, staff.

The Pigger's Guide will be sold today in the co-op and the checking counter of the Student SU. After today, the guide will be sold at the SU desk and co-op.

GOP's Plan, Take Action

A resolution calling for the establishment of a new four-year college in Portland was adopted at the state convention of the Oregon Young Republicans in Eugene Saturday. The resolution carried in a close standing vote over opposition principally from a group representing Eastern Oregon College of Education.

Douglas Spencer, Eugene attorney, was elected state chairman of the group during their two-day meet. Spencer was opposed by Ed Georgeff of Portland who was elected assistant chairman.

Eleven delegates represented the University of Oregon at the meeting which included delegations from counties as well as the College League of Young Republicans.

Oregon students attending included Alex Byler, Earl Fowler, Dick Hawes, Jay Fournier, Bruce Holt, Joan Nelson, Bob Pollack, Phyllis Raney, John Tonack and Jackie Wardell.

Miss Nelson served as secretary of the constitution and by-laws committee of the convention.

In other convention action, the group approved of twelve resolutions passed at a work session two months ago.

The convention delegates heard speeches by Oregon's senior Senator Guy Cordon; Harris Ellsworth, congressman from the fourth district; Bob Elliott, Republican state chairman, and Clay Myers, retiring chairman of the Oregon Young Republicans.

Cordon, the main speaker at the Saturday night banquet, said that now that the Republicans are in power "we have a lot of promissory notes to redeem."

He listed three major campaign promises that must be fulfilled. They were:

"To clean up the mess in Washington from top to bottom."

"To bring efficiency and economy back into government."

"To rationalize our foreign relations."

Officers elected by the group besides Spencer and Georgeff include George Jones of Marion-Polk county, national committeeman; Shirley Fields, Portland, national committeewoman; Marilyn Peake, Northwestern School of Law, co-chairman; Richard Paul, Northwestern, vice-chairman at large; Beverly Hagen, Portland, secretary, and Ronald Bayes, Eastern Oregon College of Education, treasurer.
