Foskett Explains Jean Rousseau's Social Theories

"He'd have had nightmares!" said J. M. Foskett, associate professor of sociology, when asked what author Rousseau would think of today's labor unions. Foskett gave his interpretations of the eighteenth century author's philosophies in a browsing room talk Wednesday night at the Student Union.

He discussed Jean Jacques Rousseau's two early discourses that led to his fame, "Discourses" and "Social Contract."

In these the author shows the relation between the individual and the state, he said, and maintained that the author rejected social ties that would limit his freedom. These ties, according to the speaker, were that of family, church and fraternities.

Analyzing the French author's totalitarian sympathies, Foskett implied that Rousseau would have been happy to live in a Germany such as that under the rule of Hitler. But that was impossible during Rousseau's life in France. However, his writings on totalitarianism have had a great influence on his more modern readers.

The philosopher, he said, was a complete failure both socially, morally, economically and domestically at the age of 37. Then Rousseau turned from music and poetry to the philosophy that made him famous.

Rousseau believed in no intermediate groups or associations between personal freedom and the state. He held sheer security so important, Foskett said, that one would pay any price to get it. Thus he stood for the "contract of a free man" to be completely independent of his fellow man, but completely dependent on the state.

DuShane Asserts UO Special Event Policy

University policy is to encourage student attendance at assemblies and lectures, Donald DuShane, director of student affairs, said Wednesday afternoon.

DuShane's statement came in answer to a letter published by the Emerald Wednesday morning in which the writer, Gordon Jones, graduate student in journalism, criticized dormitory rules and regulations which he said kept freshmen women from attending Roscoe Drummond's Monday evening address in the Student Union ballroom.

Gunn to Lecture At UO Tuesday

D. Keith Gunn, from the Wellington, New Zealand Evening Star, will be on campus next week from Sunday through Friday to talk with journalism students and faculty.

Gunn is currently touring the United States for three months under the joint sponsorship of the U.S. State department and newspaper owners. The State department is paying his traveling expenses and the publishers are providing a maintenance grant for his expenses. He is being brought to the University of Oregon under the Eric Allen Memorial fund for the school of journalism.

A former president of the New Zealand Journalists' association, Gunn is currently vice president and has been awarded that organization's gold badge.

Tuesday Gunn will address a 1 p.m. journalism assembly. During the week he will also speak to classes in journalism and will meet with faculty members, according to Gordon A. Sabine, dean of the journalism school.

IDC Plans to Sponsor Winter Term Dance

A dance, sponsored by the Inter-dorm council, will be held winter term, IDC president Tom Shepherd has announced. A council meeting was held Monday that approved the dance committee's plans for the affair. Committee co-chairmen are John Feliz and Mark Newman.

In his statement DuShane said: "Dormitory regulations certainly permit student attendance at all cultural and educational events, including concerts and assemblies. And University policy is to encourage such attendance."

"Apparently what happened Monday is that some house mothers didn't know about the Drummond assembly, one more distressing consequence of Emerald-less Mondays."

In his letter Jones stated: "One cannot help questioning the sagacity of bringing a man of Drummond's stature to the campus only to have a large segment of the students kept behind closed doors in their dorm reading about the men they could be seeing and hearing in person."

UO Faculty Plans First Music Recital

First of this year's series of faculty music recitals will be presented tonight at 8:15 in the music school auditorium by cellist Milton Dieterich, assistant professor of music.

The program will consist of Bach's "Suite III in A major, Beethoven's "Sonata in A major, Opus 69" and Schubert's "Trio in B flat major, Opus 99."

Assisting Dieterich will be George Boughton, violinist, and William Woods, pianist, also members of the University school of music faculty.
