

Oregon's Lowell and the General

J School Chosen To Do Research

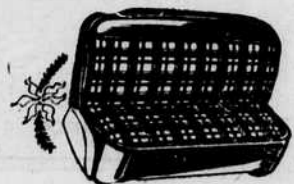

The University of Oregon school of journalism has been chosen as one of ten in the United States to study foreign news carried by the American press, its Communications Research division announced this week.

The research is conducted under a $225,000 grant for the Ford Foundation to the International Press Institute. The Institute is an association of editors in 33 countries, and is headed by Lester Markel, Sunday editor of the New York Times.

The study covers 175 newspapers and files of all world news agencies. It will make the first comprehensive analysis ever attempted of the nature and extent of the flow of foreign news into the United States, and the use of news of foreign nations in the U.S. papers.

Mrs. Paul Stanfield has been added to the journalism faculty as a research assistant for the project, which is under the direction of Charles T. Duncan, associate professor of journalism in the university.

Other journalism schools cooperating with the IPI in the work are those at Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Tulane, Missouri, Syracuse, Stanford and Boston.
