

ASUO Senators Want More 'Dope' On Student Leader Publication

By Jim Haycox
Emerald Editorial Assistant

Are publications which list the names of student leaders anything more than book-selling schemes? Do "leaders of finance and industry" readily turn to these books for reference when an ex-college leader applies for a job?

Do these books list leading students from big colleges or are most of the entries from smaller, sometimes unheard of institutions?

These are some of the questions ASUO senators were asking each other Thursday as they surveyed something that's getting to be an old story—blanks to be filled out sent to a publishing company for inclusion in a book list of student leaders.

Not being able to determine to their own satisfaction just what was up, the senators gathered up the blanks and directed sophomore representative Mary Whitaker to write the company for more information.

They'd like to know what schools will be represented, what quotas of students from each school are eligible, how long the company has been in business and what the publication date for the coming issue is.

Some of the senators had nothing but unkind words for ventures of this nature with which they'd already had some experience.

A Flood Came

Bill Frye suggested that "It isn't too hard for anybody to get his name in."

Don Collin described a student leader listing he'd put his name in last year as "nothing but a premeditated scheme as far as I could see." Collin said he and his parents had been flooded with follow-up advertising.

Donald DuShane, director of student affairs and senate adviser, suggested that the University was well qualified to recommend students for jobs if that was what senators considered important.

He added that he would like to see the University "have no official part" in the contemplated book.

Two Women Pledged

Two freshmen women were pledged by Delta Delta Delta this week, according to an announcement released by the office of women's affairs. Those pledged were Susan B. Grant and Sarah Ann Smith.

Analysis of Anderson Report Shows University Arguments Against Plan

By Ann Ogle
Emerald Reporter

Oregon's State Board of Higher Education supported, by a 5-3 vote, the position of the University of Oregon on the controversial Anderson Report. Outwardly a survey of teacher education facilities in the state-supported higher education schools, the report, which was passed on Jan. 5, had a few skeletons in the clauses.

Submitted by a professor of education from Ohio state, the Anderson report made two important recommendations. The first proposed "the expansion and improvement of teacher-education facilities and programs at the several institutions of the System."

Under this provision, the college of education would give secondary as well as elementary teacher-training programs, and the University of Oregon would add the training of elementary teachers to its agenda. Devised to meet the teacher shortage in Oregon, the program would require expansion of the library and additions to the faculty. It was nevertheless passed by the Board and approved by both faculty and administration.

The second facet of the report, which recommended that the three Oregon colleges of education be allowed to give non-education liberal arts degrees, was strongly opposed by the University.

According to Lyle M. Nelson, University Director of Public Services, it "proposed a program which had not been adequately studied," since the colleges of education have inadequate facilities to carry out the liberal arts program. It would be years, he maintained, before they could train their students adequately in this field. Even then, it would take an enormous outlay of the State's money to make the program a success, he pointed out.

President Harry K. Newburn protested that the committee set up to study the Anderson Report was composed entirely of professional educators, and that there was no representation of the liberal arts viewpoint. He also stated that the University of Oregon, vitally concerned with the provisions of the report, had not been given a place on the committee. As a result of this, two University faculty members and one from Oregon State were added to the committee.

An advisory council, headed by English Professor Hoyt Trowbridge, requested Chancellor Byrne of the State Board of Higher Education for an opportunity to study the report. The Board agreed to hold the report over until January, when it would be voted upon.

On January 5, the Board defeated Provision II of the report, and it was decided that colleges of education will not be allowed to give Bachelor of Arts degrees.

The third provision of the report, recommending that the Portland extension be allowed to give four years of teacher-training on both elementary and secondary levels, was passed. It was stipulated that the resulting degree must be granted from the University of Oregon or Oregon State, and that at least one of the four training years be taken at one of the degree-granting institutions.

Charles Grover, graduate in history, was elected president of Young Democrats at a regular meeting on Jan. 14.

Other new officers are Illa Edwards, first vice-president; Ken Reed, second vice-president; Lorna Davis, secretary and Hank Orner, treasurer.

A vote of appreciation was given to outgoing president, Arlo Giles, and Advisor E. R. Bingham, assistant professor of history. Bingham was re-elected advisor for the coming year.

UO Rifle Team to Compete in Match Against Shedd Group on Thursday

The military department has announced that there will be a rifle shoot with the team from Shedd, Ore., Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the ROTC building. The Shedd team is a member of the National Rifle association and won 22 out of 24 matches last year.

Results of the firing in last Tuesday's match are still unknown. A shoot was held at that time to vie for the William Randolph Heart trophy; a national contest sponsored by Hearst in which the Oregon teams of the past have placed either first or second.

There are at the present three separate rifle teams on campus. Capt. David Rooks and M-Sgt. William Scoles are manager and assistant manager respectively of the Army ROTC team. Maj. Grant Smith and M-Sgt. Harry Wickman are manager and assistant manager respectively of the Air Force ROTC team. The varsity team is a compilation of the most expert riflemen in these two groups.

The members of the army team are: Royal Aubrey, Francis Beman, Gordon Nobriga, Lee Tucker, Herbert Yamanaka, and Henry Donda. Those on the air force team are John Gabrielson, William Mikkelsen, Michael McKenzie, Thomas Taylor, Theodore Leonard, John Winklerman, and Robert Miller.

J School to Display Direct Mail Ads

A display of some of the best pieces of direct mail advertising will be on exhibit in the journalism school for the remainder of this week, according to Willard Thompson, assistant professor of advertising.

Sponsored on campus by the Lane Advertising club and campus Ad club, the display includes top examples of direct mail from all over the nation which have been judged and sent on national tour by the Direct Mail association. The association conducts a yearly contest to further the betterment of direct mail advertising.

The exhibit, sent from New York, is making its second Oregon appearance here. It also was put on show in Portland. The display was procured from Abbott, Kerns and Bell of Portland.

OSP Names Duncan Executive Secretary

An associate professor of journalism, Charles T. Duncan, has been appointed executive secretary of the Oregon Scholastic Press.

Sponsored by the University's school of journalism, OSP is composed of high school papers from all over the state of Oregon. Duncan will serve as editor of the OSP Bulletin and will be in charge of planning the group's annual press conference.

Head of History Returns to UO

Gordon Wright, head of the history department, is back on campus after spending fall term as an instructor at the National War college in Washington, D. C.

Wright was one of five civilians chosen for the post. That number are selected each year. Wright served as an instructor in a study devoted to "A Study of Grand Strategy."

The college was set up in 1946 when the need to get advanced planning for a unified program for various departments of the government seemed necessary.

Wright also attended the National Historical convention in Washington and was elected to an office on the executive council of the modern history section. One of the council's jobs is to supervise the Journal of Modern History and nominations for its board of editors.
