Chairmen Named for Arts Workshop, Intercollegiate Bridge, Billiards Tourney

Chairmen for the SU creative arts workshop program, national intercollegiate bridge tournament and intercollegiate billiards tournament have been announced by Don Zavin, vice-chairman of the SU board.

New chairman of the creative arts workshop program is Valerie Cows, freshman in liberal arts, who is to be in charge of the programs presented by the various departments of the school. Assisting her as members of the committee will be Hollis Ransom, junior in law, and Sally Hougham, sophomore in liberal arts.

Chairman of the bridge tournament, to be held Feb. 19-21, will be Edwin Elderkin, junior in political science. The billiards tournament, which will be held March 5-19, will be under the chairmanship of John Shaffer, freshman in liberal arts.

Professor Discusses

He agreed with Hoyle's theory that the sun would eventually burn itself out and then explode, as most stars do.

Also brought out in the question period was the fact that no life could possibly be transferred from one planet to another because of the intensity of sun's rays through which it would have to pass. This light, in the absence of atmosphere, is strong enough to blacken skin in one minute, said Ebbighausen.

A 'FINE' STATE OF AFFAIRS

Student Court Lists Regulations; Warns Violators of Punishments

The student court is preparing a copy of the University's traffic violation rules for distribution, during pre-registration for spring term, to every student owning a car.

When a student receives a citation, according to Fred Turner, head of the court, he may either pay the fine at the office of student affairs or appear before the court at its next meeting. The court meets every other Wednesday night.

If a student fails to appear or to pay his fine, he will be traced on the court's records and will be sent one notice. If the notice is not acted upon, the court will then deduct the full amount of the fine plus 50 cents charge for late payment from the student's breakage fee. This is a change from this term's policy, which was to try to collect in cash from the violators, Turner said.

No Charge

New students should note that registration cards for student-operated vehicles are always available at the office of student affairs, Turner emphasized. There is no charge for the registration.

An additional one dollar fine will be added to the violation incurred by the student if his registration sticker is not displayed somewhere on the car, it was pointed out by the court. This too, is a change from the present policy, which has been to double the amount of the fine.

Any car found to be obstructing traffic or blocking fire lanes or hydrants is subject to being towed away, day or night, according to court rules. This is the same as the city ruling for the same violation.

Back Drive Violations

I. I. Wright, superintendent of the university's physical plant, stated in a meeting with court members that if students persist in making violations in the Student Union back drive, the drive will be eliminated. At the present time, the court levies a fine of $2 for parking there.

Wright and court members Sally Haseltine, junior in business; Don Rotenberg, sophomore in chemistry; Carl Weber, junior in business; Malcolm Montague, graduate in law, and Turner, decided to have the turnarounds in the Fiji parking lot painted with yellow stripes and to have parking stalls marked on the ends of the lanes in the lot. Violations on the lot would consist of parking in a yellow zone. If this measure doesn't alleviate problems there, cars will be towed away from the area.

Money collected from violations is used for a scholarship, awarded annually to a person recommended by the court and chosen by the university's scholarship committee.

Job Opportunities

Positions as nature and craft counselors, waterfront directors and unit leaders and assistants are now being offered by Girl Scout councils. The openings are for the usual type of Girl Scout camp program, and the minimum age limit varies from 18 to 20 years.

Those applying for waterfront director will need a Red Cross safety instruction certificate, and a Red Cross senior life-saving or water-safety certificate.

Applications for those interested are available in the teachers' placement center behind the school of education, on campus.
