J-Students Plan Vacation 'Work'

Twelve upper division journalism students will gain practical experience on the job spring vacation when they take over publication of three Oregon weekly newspapers.

The students will work in teams of four on news, advertising, photography and editing, as part of the journalism school's annual spring-term program of giving advanced students experienced training.

Newspaper publishers co-operating with the program this year are Ralph Stuller, Coquille Valley Sentinel; Fred Haas, North Bend News; and Hal Schiltz, Myrtle Creek Mail. In addition, one student will work at radio station KPOJ in Portland with Dick Brown, station manager.

Operating entirely on their own, students will do all the work except mechanical production, which will be done by regular back-shop personnel. Publishers of the papers will be present for consultation only.
