A Good Beginning

Enrollment and student enthusiasm seem to indicate a successful first year for the Sophomore Honors program.

Few of the unexpectedly large number of honors students enrolled dropped out of the program. Grades have been consistently above the average "curve." Professors agree that honors students are top students.

But the final verdict won't be known until late in May, after the first comprehensive exams.

The exams are as unique as the honors program itself. Regular two-hour written tests, they won't be limited to material covered in the three terms of the courses. They're tests of general knowledge in each of the four fields, literature, biology, physics, and history.

They won't substitute for the final, unless the student wishes.

Sub-committees will grade the exams on the basis of honors qualifications alone. No letter grade will be given. If the student wishes the exam to count as his final, however, the instructor will re-grade the exam, this time on an A, B, C basis.

Exam reading lists are being distributed to honors students now. These lists aren't confined to course material, and students are urged to use information from other sources.

In addition, a student doesn't have to be enrolled in one of the four honors courses to qualify for the exam. All he has to do is have 15 hours of completed work in the University, with a 2.75 GPA, and not more than 93 credit hours.

Since there are no set standards for the "pass with distinction" requirements for an honors award, it's hard to say how many students will earn their honors certificates.

Even if it's only two-thirds of the honors enrollment, however, the program will have been worthwhile.

Another indication that the program is concluding it's first year with flying colors is the planning going on now for next year's program.

It's going to be twice as big.

Effect of Yugoslav Revolt on Russia Outlined in Browsing Room Talk

Yugoslavia's revolt from the Soviet Union "hit Russia in the Achilles heel" and "started a chain reaction in the communist world," according to Ivan Nagy, assistant professor of political science, who spoke on "The Enforcement of Political Orthodoxy" in a browsing room lecture Tuesday night.

Marshall Tito, who headed the Yugoslavian revolt, "is the only person who ever opposed Stalin and got away with it," Nagy continued. He was the "Red peril" to Stalin, since he broke the myth of Russian omnipotence and stirred up revolts in the satellites of eastern Europe.

According to Nagy, the Yugoslavian break with the Soviets occurred because the Yugoslavian citizen is not a "slave of nature." The reddish-orange sails of the fishing boats on the Adriatic, the citrus fruit, and the warm climate produce a great independence and zest for life in the Yugoslavians, he noted. The bleak climate of Soviet Union devitalizes the human spirit, and tends to produce a "robot" personality, he said.

The dramatic personality of Tito was an important factor in the success of the revolt, Nagy stated. Tito, who divides his leisure time between Sherlock Holmes and Viennese waltzes, came from humble peasant stock to become one of the most influential Europeans of our day. Under his leadership the Yugoslavs united in their attempt to balk Russia.

Since Stalin's death, there have been three significant developments in Yugoslavia, Nagy concluded. The political leaders have loosened the reins on the people, allowing them to criticize the government on minor points; collective farming is now a matter of individual choice; and taxation of the factory workers is now done on the western basis.
