Newburn to Talk At Industry Meet

President H. K. Newburn will deliver the opening address at the third annual Northwest Conference on Industrial Relations which will be held on campus Thursday and Friday.

The sessions will promote understanding of "the other fellow's problems in the industrial system as it operates under the free and democratic American economy, and through this understanding, achieve a higher level of industrial relation," according to the economics department.

Thursday's program for the conference includes Newburn's address; David Darland, Pacific university, moderating a panel on "The Know-How of Contract Negotiations"; Major C. T. Estes, special assistant of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation service moderating a panel on "The Know-How of Building Confidence in Labor-Management Relations."

The conference will conclude Friday with a panel on "The Know-How of Grievance Procedure," moderated by Roy D. Mahaffey, Linfield college, and "The Know-How of Educational Procedures," led by Karl F. Harshbarger, junior in speech.

A TRUE FRIEND

S. H. Friendly Recalled

"Friendly is the student's friend" was the lifelong motto and policy of Samson H. Friendly, one of the early patrons both of the University and its individual students and namesake of Friendly hall.

Friendly served on the Board of Regents of the University continuously for over twenty years, until his death in the summer of 1915. But his real service to the students was his encouragement and enthusiastic support in all matters concerning the University.

The Eugene merchant operated a general store on Willamette Street, and was always able to find jobs for deserving students, even when jobs were scarce. In addition, he lent his own money to students without interest, in cases where it was needed.

Friendly appeared at all athletic events and rallies, offering his encouraging words, "Victory will be ours," to coaches and teams who were sometimes not as enthusiastic as he.

Grateful students gathered for a memorial assembly in Villard hall on Nov. 2, 1915 and, at the suggestion of Lamar Tooze, then the student body president, and University President Campbell, decided to name one of the buildings after him to perpetuate his memory on the campus.

The men's dormitory of that time, which had been built in 1893, became Friendly hall, which name it has retained after many changes in the building itself have occurred.

These changes were not always well-received, as a story from the Portland Oregonian following a fourth addition to the building, in 1919, stated frankly that "its beauty is lost." The same story spoke in disapproving terms of additions to other early buildings on the campus such as Villard hall and Mary Spiller hall, the first women's dormitory.

In 1928, Friendly hall became too small to house the rapidly growing number of men students, and John Straub was built, leaving Friendly free for use as a classroom building.

UO Model Shows 15-Year-Old Plans

Deeply hidden in the somewhat isolated basement of Johnson Hall, curiosity seekers will find a model of the University of Oregon, showing their long range building plan — of fifteen years ago.

According to Lyle M. Nelson, director of public services, departure from the plan, shown in the glass-enclosed model, was necessary due to unforeseen factors. The large increase in enrollment at the close of the World War II is one of these reasons. The fact that bedrock was too far beneath the Fiji parking lot prohibited the building of the Student Union on that site, as the model shows.

Dominating the entire campus, on what is now the library quad, was proposed a large building to house drama and music departments as well as a large auditorium. Fenton hall, present home of the law school, was the library, while future lawyers dwelt in the halls of old Oregon hall—now the west wing of Commonwealth Hall. Shows Susan Campbell and Hendrick's Halls with additions increasing their length almost as far north as Johnson hall. A domestic science building was to have been erected in the center of the quad.

Condon Hall was to be the home of the science department, according to the architects, Lawrence and Holford. The model was constructed by C. D. James, of Portland.
