

Harshbarger Sells Story to Atlantic

"Atlantic Monthly," a publication not in the habit of accepting neophyte authors' contributions, will publish, late this summer, a story by Karl Harshbarger, junior in speech.

Harshbarger, chairman of the Student Union coffee hour forum committee, gave the story, entitled "Del," to Monthly Editor Edward Weeks when the latter appeared on campus last October.

"In fact," Harshbarger said Tuesday, "I was rewriting the story as the forum went on."

Goes to Cannery

The story, according to Harshbarger, is about a "boy from a lonely farm life who goes to a cannery labor camp where the situation is just as lonely."

He can not grow homesick because home is just as lonely as where he now is. The boy finds his only relief in wanting and, in the climax of the story, attempting to ride with the trans-continental diesel trucks.

This is the first story Harshbarger has had published. A poem by him, "Haze Cold Suspended," was printed in the "Annual Anthology of College Poetry" last December.

Springs From Experiences

Although taking a writing course at the time he wrote the story, Harshbarger said that the major portion springs from his experiences at a cannery in Illinois similar to that depicted in his writing.
