The hearing has been tentatively set for "the end of the week" since all of the members of the constitution committee must read the amendment before the hearing, O'Connell said.

Mrs. Helen Jackson Frye, ASUO vice-president and in charge of elections, was unavailable for comment Tuesday on the contesting of the graduate student amendment.

Removal of 'O' Not Confirmed

The decision on the fate of Oregon's controversial "O" atop Skinner's Butte was passed along to the Public Safety committee at Monday night's meeting of the Eugene city council.

Committee Chairman Ray Siegenthaler said he plans no direct action until further investigation. The committee would be open to any suggestions from the University at a meeting scheduled for next week. "We do not want to remove the O," commented Siegenthaler, "but if it is a hazard, we have no choice in the matter."

Craig Weatherford, representative of Delta Upsilon, also attended the Monday night meeting. Weatherford suggested to the council that a proposal to retain the "O" would be submitted to the Public Safety committee at the next meeting. As yet plans for a proposal have not been cleared through the University administration, he said.

Y Clothing Drive Held This Week

The fifth annual clothing drive sponsored by the YMCA and the International Affairs committee of the YWCA is being held on campus this week. Clothing of all kinds is acceptable, but woolen clothes are especially needed, since this shipment of clothing will be sent to Korea, according to Germaine La Marche, chairman of the drive.

Boxes for the clothing are placed in all living organizations and will be collected Thursday evening by members of the YWCA and YMCA. The American Friends Service Committee is shipping the collected clothing to Korea, she said. In 1950-51, over 500 pounds of discarded clothing was sent to the Far East. In 1951-52 the total reached 475 pounds and was sent to Korea.

The Commonwealth Bridges Free World, U.N. President Says

The British Commonwealth of Nations should not be underestimated in figuring the free world's strength and resources or in the importance it plays in bridging the gap between the free countries of the East and West, Lester Bowles Pearson, president of the United Nations General Assembly, warned Tuesday.

Speaking on the topic "The New Commonwealth-Bridge Between East and West," Pearson told the capacity assembly audience that the Commonwealth was one of three organizations used by Canada in search for peace and security. The other two are the United Nations and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Describing the Commonwealth as "eight countries linked together by the crown and a common devotion to freedom," Pearson pointed out that the group must be regarded as a globe organization which must be seriously counted on for free world strength and resources.

Make Independent Treaties

The loose organization of the Commonwealth is shown by the lack of formal rules and regulations binding the countries, Pearson said. The independent defense pacts entered by the nations are examples of this loose organization, he said. One of the few things all members have in common is the title "Head of the Commonwealth" for the Queen of England.

The second region in which the Commonwealth plays an important part in world affairs is in the realm of bridging the gap between the free East and West. Its three member nations in Asia joined with five free nations in the West in the group make this possible, he said.

NAACP Question Discussed Tuesday

Does the student affairs committee have a right and a reason to refuse recognition to the National Association for Advancement of Colored People?

This was the question presented Tuesday evening at a public discussion of the student affairs committee-NAACP controversy which was sponsored by Young Democrats.

Since no members of the committee were present, moderator George Dalton presented the main arguments against recognition. They were based, he declared, upon the NAACP's affiliation with a national group, the furtherance of one or two segments of the population, the chapter's constitution, and their study of affairs which were foreign to campus life.

Bob Holloway, NAACP president, presented the NAACP stand. "The university," he declared, "should be a leader and encourage students to organize groups to discuss and act on problems that arise."

He stressed that organizations must "practice what they preach," and pointed out that the university was lagging behind the rest of the state, which is one of seven who have passed Fair Employment Practices Acts.

He also declared that the argument concerning national affiliation could conceivably be directed against almost every campus organization including fraternities, sororities, religious groups, and honoraries.

The benefits of recognition were also made clear, and these include the facilities of the Student Union for meetings and the use of campus places for publicity. No other chapter in the 72 colleges throughout the nation has faced the problem of recognition such as that which faces the proposed Oregon chapter, Holloway said.

which "would stagger any Western statesman," Pearson said that "we will never bridge the gap if we expect those countries to develop as images of ourselves."

The Communists have had more success than they deserve in these countries by identifying themselves with forces that seem to be those of freedom and progress," Pearson stated. Pointing out that "we can not force our arrangements on others," Pearson said that the Asians may see the present government of Red China as the representative of the people and that it should be accepted as such.

Mark Over Asia

The biggest question mark over Asia today is the uncertainty about economic and social progress, Pearson said. The countries and their leaders must answer these questions themselves, he said, but they also need help from other countries. He pointed to the United States Point Four program as a good example of this help.

He also used the "Colombo plan" of the Commonwealth as an example of this help in contributing to the development of Asia and defeating subversive elements in the Free Asia countries.

Touching briefly on the policies pursued by the U.N., NATO and the Commonwealth during the past year, Pearson said that "we have been on the right path through 1953 and we must not abandon it."

Waldo's 'Love', Snowbelle, Is Ill

If Waldo has been wearing a rather dejected and mournful expression the last few days, it must be because his lady love, the Phi Psi mascot Snowbelle, has been ailing.

The golden-haired St. Bernard has been rather listless and mopey for days. She started sleeping in mornings and cutting her 8 o'clock class.

The Phi Psis took Snowbelle to the veterinarian over the weekend. Diagnosis: tonsillitis. Snowbelle will be back home today if no complications set in. No operation will be necessary, the vet reported.

World Questions Topic of Forum

"As long as the Chinese fight us in North Korea, there can be no recognition of their present government or even consideration of such a step," Lester Bowles Pearson, president of UN General Assembly, said in a coffee hour forum Tuesday.

"But, we must face facts if, and its a string of big ifs, the Korean situation is peacefully concluded and the Chinese Reds make no further moves of aggression in Asia," he said.

No move towards an Atlantic federation could be taken unless it comes from the United States, Pearson said. Such a move would be merely academic unless Washington came out in favor of it, he claimed.

No Opposition in Principle

"I am not opposed to world federation in principle but it would break up the present organization if an attempt were made to revise the present United Nations charter to encompass such a change," Pearson maintained in regard to the current World Federalist proposal to take such a step. "And with all its imperfections, the UN is a good thing to maintain."

"We can't rely on a revision of the charter to make the UN work," Pearson told the capacity audience. "The doctrine of the present charter isn't wrong: it's the will and spirit of the countries in the organization which are hamstringing it. Even the United States and Britain would not seriously consider giving up the veto."

Pearson considered it "improper" to comment on Canada's attitude toward Senator Joseph McCarthy as a public official of the U. S. government. "I won't say anymore," he added.

Vishinsky Is Clever

He described Andrei Vishinsky as a "clever, powerful man doing a magnificent job for Russia in the United Nations," while off duty he is a "good host" with a charming, engaging personality.

"I'm not sure the power in Russia has changed; let's wait awhile and see," Pearson said in response to a question on Malenkov's recent appointment. "My first reaction was one of surprise and shock. Maybe we'll do better with Russia if internal problems do develop."

A Good Case Against UN

"South Africa could make a good case against the UN discussing or giving decisions on domestic race legislation," Pearson said. "However, the General Assembly voted down South Africa's objection on the grounds that any domestic affair which constitutes a threat to an humanitarian way of life and Thursday at 1 p.m. the entire corps of Army cadets will hold the annual inspection parade with the drill team putting on a special exhibition.
