UCLA Here For Opener

their first two outings the Ducks have displayed a surprisingly strong ground game which has netted them a 239 yard per game USCaverage, best in the Pacific Coast Conference.

Although Oregon has not shown much of a passing offense thus Mich far no one is losing much sleep over that. George Shaw is in his third varsity season with the Ducks and in his first two seasons he demonstrated a sterling passing arm which was a worry to opponents at all times. Even though he has not thrown many yet this year General George will open the gates to the aerial game Yanks when the need arises. In both the Nebraska and Stanford tussles the rushing plays were working so well that there was little need for much passing.

Because of this show of offensive strength on the part of the Webfoots speculation as to the final result of this game has changed greatly. Now, Oregon is given a good chance of making a tight ball game of it. Most of the forecasters are quoting UCLA as a two to three touchdown favorite but most of them are quick to admit that it could be much closer than that.

For UCLA this game with Oregon could go a long way in telling just how strong the Bruins are. Rated by many experts as the number one team in the country the Uclans thus far have not lived up to their terrific pre-season publicity.

Last week they were hard pressed to nip the Kansas Jayhawks, A decisive win over the 19-7. Ducks would take away all doubts as to the strength of Red Sanders' eleven.

On the other hand if Oregon should upset the Bruins the Uclans would be knocked completely off of their throne in the clouds of the football kingdom.

Oregon will enter the game in fairly good physical condition. Backs Cecil Hodges and Ted Anderson will probably be slowed up a little by injuries but both are due to see some action.

When the two teams line-up for the 1:30 p.m. kickoff Saturday afternoon the starting teams will probably look like this:
