In 1947, Schmitt took a 10,000 mile trip through the western states looking for early photographs. As a result of this venture and others similar to it, the University library has one of the best negative collections on the Pacific coast, containing some 10,000 prints.

In collaboration with Dee Brown of the University of Illinois agriculture library, the speaker has compiled photographic histories of Indian wars and of the cattle trade. These histories are the beginnings of a complete photographic history of the western settler, which the two hope to compile. The history will show how the settlers moved westward and illustrate their day-to-day routine. Schmitt feels that the history of photography and the history of western settlement run together in time, beginning as they both did about 1839. He added that one can find a photograph of almost anything that happened in the development of the West, or of anyone who was an important figure in that development.

Thurs. Night In CMA Show

A repertoire ranging from operatic arias to ballads and sea chanties is at the command of Metropolitan Baritone Leonard Warren, appearing in McArthur court Thursday evening under the auspices of the Eugene-University Civic Music association.

The singer, who has a performance record in concert, radio and television as well as his operatie roles with the Met, started his career by trying out for the Metropolitan Opera Auditions of the Air knowing only three arias.

On the day of his trial he was the 79th singer to be heard by conductor Wilfred Pelletier. Pelletier first thought that the voice he was hearing was that of some famous singer on a recording being played by one of the technicians as a joke.

Since that day Warren has
