Miller's 'The Crucible' Browsing Room Topic

Horace Robinson, associate professor of speech, will present a reading of connected excerpts from Arthur Miller's last play, "The Crucible," tonight at 7:30 on the Student Union browsing room.

Miller, one of America's foremost young dramatists, is also the author of "Death of a Salesman," and "All My Sons."

"The Crucible" has yet to be produced in the West, although it opened on Broadway last season and has subsequently played on the road. According to Robinson, the play has not been a hit but it has a "high artistic form, more on the intellectual level."

The play draws a parallel between early American history and the present time. Its depiction of the Salem witchcraft trials in the Puritan times suggests "certain witchcraft trials in Washington, D. C.," according to Robinson.

The drama centers around a husband and wife, the latter of whom is unjustly accused of witchcraft. The author shows how this and a combination of other circumstances ultimately leads to their destruction.

Robinson has characterized the play as an example of public hysteria and persecution, and is a "kind of condemnation of mob action."

Nagy Says Europeans Have Bad U.S. Concept

Americans have no manners or culture and are big brutes. This is the concept many Europeans have of Americans, stated Ivan G. Nagy, assistant professor of political science in a panel discussion on "Foreigner's Views of the United States," presented by the International Relations club and Pi Sigma Alpha, political science honorary, last night at the first meeting of the IRC.

Nagy elaborated by saying that we have given Europeans that impression through our worst tourists, our movies, and our materialistic attitude. Americans have different standards and the Europeans don't understand them.

Although the European people as a whole seem to like the Americans, the elite class, which is the influential class, view us with alarm. The youth and masses are "gobbling up" anything from the United States, and since the U. S. is almost entirely middle class, the elite see that soon their class may cease to exist.

Nagy said that although the elite are worried for their own sakes as a class, they also fear this new concept of society because they feel there is no culture in it.

Paul S. Dull, associate professor of history, discussed the topic from the Asiatic, and especially the Japanese, point of view. He said that there were three general stereotypes held by Asiatics about Americans—we are all very materialistic, wealthy, and have great racial prejudice. These ideas have been developed to a great extent from the same sources as the Europeans'—tourists and the movies. Only the lowest "B" movies seem to be shown in Japan, Dull said.

Dull stated that the potential for good relations with Asia is there, especially with the common people who have so far been quite untouched by most of the propaganda against the U. S.

However, we must appear to practice the idea of democracy for all, not only Americans. We must really want to help them, not just further our own interests at their expense.

Frosh To Repair 'O' Saturday

The "O" on Skinner's Butte will be fixed Saturday morning, according to plans made by Freshman Class Pres. Don Smith and the other recently elected class officers.

Smith, along with Vice Pres. Doug Basham and Rep. Darrell Brittsan and Gary West, were to meet at noon today at John Straub hall with the freshman dormitory presidents and A. L. Ellingson, counselor for men, to go over the plans.

The "O" will be made of wood and covered with sheet metal. The Star Lumber company will donate at least part of the lumber needed, Smith said. A site of about 50 feet west of the old "O" has been selected for the new landmark.

Saturday's schedule calls for work to begin at 8 a. m., Smith said. A snowball rally-type car parade is planned to get the freshmen men out and up to the butte for work. The remains of the old cement "O" will be taken down and dumped behind the physical plant.

According to Smith, arrangements are being made with Straub for sack lunches to be prepared and taken up to the Butte at noon by the freshmen women. A combined work and California game listening party is planned for the afternoon. If possible, the "O" will also be painted. The freshmen women might help with this, Smith said.

Magsaysay Takes Strong Vote Lead In Philippine Race

(AP) Ramon Magsaysay holds a wide lead in the Philippines presidential election over incumbent President Epidio Quirino. With almost all results in from Manila, Magsaysay had 178,000 votes to 44,000 for Quirino. Magsaysay, however, was expected to run especially strong in the capital city.

The Philippine News Service said last night that the younger man's strong lead appeared likely to develop into a landslide victory.

Magsaysay, Quirino's one-time defense minister, has been campaigning on a reform platform denouncing the alleged inefficiency and corruption on the present administration. He has had the backing Carlos P. Romulo, former Philippine delegate to the United Nations, and himself a former president of the republic.

Psych Department May Get Program

The University department of psychology may have a fully accredited doctoral training program in clinical psychology by next fall if a few improvements in facilities are made.

R. W. Leeper, head of the department, met with Dr. Max Levin of the Public Health Service in Portland Sunday morning to discuss the program itself and the possibilities of installing the program. Dr. Levin is attached to the training and standards branch of the National Institute of Mental Health, with headquarters in Washington, D. C.

Leeper reported that a committee from the Public Health Service will visit the department later this year to make a survey of facilities. All of the formal courses necessary for accreditation are now available in the department, but there is still a lack of facilities for internship and practical experience work.

The department is now authorized by the University to grant doctorate degrees, but few students take the degree here because the school is not accredited, Leeper said.

are in effect, all freshmen men must wear green rooters' lids, and all freshmen women must wear green ribbons in their hair.

No smoking is allowed on the old campus, and no one is allowed to walk on the lawns. Everyone must speak to the people they meet on the hello walk between the Student Union and 13th st.

Freshman men must wear suntans, sophomore men may wear either suntans or levis, and upperclassmen may wear either cords or slacks. Homecoming buttons are mandatory for all students.

Traditions violators will be punished November 20 at 4 p. m. Women violators will be dunked in Fenton Pool, and the men will be given hacks, according to Hedgepeth.

Retakes for SAM, Theta Chi Slated

Theta Chi and Sigma Alpha Mu will have re-sittings and makeup pictures taken at Kennell-Ellis today, according to Janet Bell, Oregon living organizations editor.

Since a special week has been set aside for last week's scheduled fraternities, Miss Bell has urged fraternities to take advantage of this time for makeups.

Thursday's schedule is for Sigma Phi Epsilon and Sigma Chi makeups. Times for both days are 9 a. m. to 5:15 p. m. Friday has been slated as all-fraternity makeup day at Kennell-Ellis.

Miss Bell emphasized that dress must be suits and ties, and that dormitory as well as fraternity students must adhere to the ruling.
