

Duck Tracks

By Bob Robinson
Assistant Sports Editor

Several weeks ago in this column an extensive criticism was written on the ridiculous nature of the supposedly noted football ratings of the one and only Paul B. Williamson. We hate to go back and stir up old arguments but this week's rankings by Williamson leave us with no choice. They are so absurd that we just have to mention them.

If you haven't already consulted Williamson's "golden list," which one is foolish to do if he wants any half-way accurate information, be sure and do it. We guarantee that you will laugh just as much as when you read one of Bibler's Worthal cartoons.

Oregon 65th

Williamson has Oregon's high flying Ducks buried deep down in 65th place. This is rather hard to understand, considering that the Webfoots haven't dropped a game since the Washington tussle way back in mid-season. Three weeks ago after the Southern California game Oregon was ranked 48th. When the Ducks romped over Idaho they were dropped clear to 60th. Last week-end as the up and coming lads of Len Casanova held highly-touted California to a 0-0 standstill Williamson pushed the Ducks down five more places. For the life of us we cannot figure out why in the world Oregon keeps losing ground in the rankings despite their tremendous successes on the gridiron.

Oh, Those Mighty Beavers

Williamson might have been forgiven for the mistakes he made above in the minds of University of Oregon students but one other error he made makes him unpardonable. He has the Aggies from Corvallis, better known as Oregon State, rated as 58th in the nation, seven places ahead of Oregon. Now, how can one account for that? We can give no substantial answer.

The Beavers have been absolutely impotent all year long and don't deserve that good a rating anymore than "Podunk State." We are willing to grant the fact that the Beavers looked much better last week-end in their 7-0 win over Washington State but that is the only game all year long in which they have shown any football skill. Many people have pointed to their victory over Idaho as being a big achievement. We would like to ask these people one question. Who hasn't beat Idaho?

The Beavers started off the season with five straight losses and it was their sixth game of the year before they were able to score even a single point. For the season they have an overall record of two wins and six losses as compared to Oregon's mark of four wins, four losses, and one tie. Why should the Aggies be so popular with Williamson?

OSC Over Oregon

As a result of his ratings Williamson has put forth the prediction that Oregon State will climax their season by defeating Oregon this Saturday at Eugene. We will not make any comment on this prediction because it is entirely unnecessary. Anyone who follows the football results each week-end can very obviously see that Mr. Williamson is off his "rocker" in picking the Beavers to win.

Another person who has openly stated that OSC will win over the Ducks is none other than Kip Taylor, Oregon State coach. We wonder if he is actually serious. He is probably still up in the clouds floating around on the prosperity of the Beavers' win over WSC. A thorough trouncing from Oregon this week-end would bring him back to earth.

Get Mad, You Ducks

We think that University of Oregon football players and the Webfoot student body as a whole should be highly insulted at seeing their worthy grid squad taken so lightly. Come Saturday and the players will have their chance to get revenge. Also, on Saturday the Oregon students ought to have a wonderful opportunity to get in their licks, too. By turning out in mass for the game the Oregon student body can show Kip Taylor, his team, and the OSC rooters that the Ducks not only have a better football team than the Beavers but also have the whole school behind their team all the way.

Big Game Saturday

Traditional games are being played all along the Pacific Coast this week-end. Besides the Oregon-OSC tilt, there are three other "Big Games" on schedule. Stanford will take on their old rival, California, at Palo Alto, UCLA and Southern Cal will battle it out at Los Angeles, and Washington will match plays with WSC at Seattle.

With Stanford and UCLA still in a deadlock for the lead in the Pacific Coast Conference standings two of these games could go a long way in determining this year's Coast Rose Bowl entry. In case both the Indians and the Bruins should score wins this Saturday conference officials will have to pick the Pasadena trekkers by vote.

Crowns Cinched By Eight Teams

Although only six leagues have finished their schedule, the championship has been decided in eight of the 13 intramural volleyball conferences.
