Theme Told For Dads Day

"King for a Day" is the theme for this year's Dad's Day, Mary Wilson and Phil Lewis, co-chairmen for the event, announced today.

The sub-chairmen for Dad's Day are Martin Brandenfels, special events; Phil Lynch, sign contest; Sally Stadelman, hospitality and reception; Barbara Wilcox, Dad's Day luncheon; and Pat McCann, publicity and promotion.

Students urged by Karl W. Onthank, executive secretary of the Oregon Dads, to inform their fathers of the coming Dad's Day celebration, Jan. 21, when they are home for Christmas vacation.

Waiting until after vacation would not give the dads enough time to plan for the weekend, warns Onthank, since the event will take place only three weeks after winter classes begin.

A varied program has been planned for the dads that weekend. Friday's events are: sign contest, a basketball game with the University of Washington and the Barbershop Quartet contest.

Saturday is the Dad's luncheon, another basketball game with the UW and Student Union tours will be conducted.

The co-chairmen stressed that the weekend will be an excellent opportunity for students to show their dads around the campus and living organizations.

Petitions for committee members are being called for by Dad's Day Luncheon Chairman Barbara Wilcox. The petitions should be turned in to the ASUO petition box, on the third floor of the Student Union, before the end of final week.

Music School Sets Concert Tonight

The University Symphony orchestra and the University Choral union will combine to give their first concert tonight at 8:15 in the school of music auditorium. Edmund Cykler conducts the orchestra and Clyde Keutzer conducts the choral union.

The string orchestra will be first on the program performing Concerto Grosso No. 1 by Francesco Geminiani. Soloists in this number are Larry Maves and Shirley Foster, violins; Warren Signor, viola; and Keith Cockburn, cello.

Last Issue Today

Today's eight page Christmas edition of the Emerald is the last paper of the term. The campus daily will resume publication Jan. 5.

Farris on Probation; No Parking Privileges

The faculty's student discipline committee Tuesday put J. Kelly Farris, third-year law student, on disciplinary probation and denied him the use of all University parking facilities, both for the balance of the school year.

While on probation, violation of University regulations will make him subject to "appropriate" action, according to J. M. Foskett, chairman of the discipline committee. Foskett did not expand upon what "appropriate" action would be in Farris' case.

Case Referred

The committee took its action because it felt that a student should not be able to flaunt an agent of student government and the University in the manner that Farris had done, and because his conduct has meant embarrassment and injury to the welfare of the University, Foskett said.

The action was taken by the committee after the office of student affairs referred the Farris case to that group. Farris refused to pay a fine levied by the student traffic court on the first charge, in effect appealing it to the office of student affairs. On the second charge, for which he received a notice to pay the fine or be subject to having it deducted from the breakage fee, he claimed that the notice might constitute extortion.

Authority Delegated

Since the time of the first ticket, Farris has asserted that the student traffic court and the office of student affairs are violating the law by not providing trial by jury upon demand, deducting fines from the breakage fee when it is not provided for in the University bulletin, and by exercising

Comments Given

J. Kelly Farris — said he would be too busy to have any comment on the discipline committee's action until after final examinations.

J. M. Foskett (besides his basis for the decision in main story) — said there is no problem as to violation of constitutional rights in the operation of the student court. The actions taken, he said, are ultimately those of the office of student affairs or the discipline committee, which bodies both accept recommendations for disposition of cases, and the functions are delegated by the faculty. an authority which was delegated to the University faculty and cannot be delegated further.

Tuesday the discipline committee felt that only the matter of the fines and Farris' conduct in regard to them was relevant to his case, but not that of the court's authority, Foskett explained.

After reviewing the case, the committee called in Farris and presented him with the violations. He was asked to make any statements he wished, regarding the offenses, that he felt were relevant and that the committee should know.

Farris Questioned

Farris, following his approach during the progress of the whole case, responded in terms of legal rights, not wishing to make any statements on grounds including constitutional rights, and avoidance of triple jeopardy, Foskett said.

Asked specifically if he had parked in the places indicated on the tickets (Johnson hall parking lot and Gerlinger hall yellow zone), Farris pleaded not guilty. This was not an answer to the question, according to Foskett. When the question was repeated, Farris again refused to answer, indicating constitutional grounds as his justification.

When asked if he had any more to say in his own behalf, Farris said he did not.

Court Supported

Explaining the nature of the discipline committee's function, Foskett said the discipline function of the University is in the hands of the faculty. The power has been delegated to the committee, which acts as a policy-forming agent.

Certain of the committee's functions have been further delegated to the office of student affairs, which can refer cases to the committee if it wishes. The student traffic court has been delegated the power to act as an agent of the office of student affairs in matters of student parking.

Foskett emphasized that the student traffic court has the full support of the committee as to the authority to act in these matters.

Pub Board Appoints Carter

Dick Carter, senior in journalism, was appointed business manager of the Oregon Daily Emerald by the student publications board Wednesday night.

Carter, the only petitioner for the position, was appointed for the remainder of the 1953-54 school year, to take over the Emerald business side beginning Jan. 1, 1954. He is presently advertising manager of the Emerald, and worked as an advertising salesman winter and spring terms of last year, after transferring here from Southern Oregon College of Education.

Carter replaces Bill Brandsness, junior in journalism, who resigned the position to accept an advertising position with the Eugene Register-Guard.
