'What's This Line For?'

Lines! And more lines! No, World War II cigarette shorages aren't back. Oregon students were registering Monday.

Clutching armloads of schedule books, class cards and registration cards (some containing directions from the old system and some containing new, conflicting direction), Oregon students stood and waited.

Lines spilled out of every building on campus. Lines going through Student Affairs check stretched down into University street and lines to the cashier's office wound up 13th for a half block.

Students waited patiently in line for an hour or so only to discover, on reaching their destination, that it was the wrong table, the wrong department or that some vital step in the procedure had been overlooked. And then they got to start all over again. More lines!

Out of curiosity, we inquired of the last person in every line we joined, "What's this line for?" Ninety nine percent of the answers received in our informal little poll were, "I don't know." But we all waited patiently in line.

One indignant student expressed his one objection to this new registration system when he exclaimed, "I used to be able to register in 45 minutes and this took me six hours."

We'd like to be hopeful and think this new system of registering in one day has solved some problems. But we tend to be like that student and hark back to those preregistration days of other winter terms when the whole thing was finished in an hour or so.

And we'd like to be complimentary so we'll point out that the direction signs in the SU ballroom were much improved over those used during fall term registration. But we still wonder why so many departments pencil up directions on scraps of paper as if this whole business of registration had caught them unaware. Inevitably, there will be registration as long as this University exists. Some permanent well-lettered direction signs containing correct directions sounds like a wise investment.

Finally, we'd like to offer a prayer of thanks to the weather man. After all, it could have rained! (E.S.)

They are James Hershner, Malcolm Marsh and Malcolm Montague, third year class; John Gill and William Norval, second year class, and Elizabeth Stelle, Albert Ferris and Cameron Thom, first year.

Sports Editorship Open on Oregana

Students interested in being sports editor of the 1954 Oregana are asked by Bob Ford, editor, to contact the Oregana office, Student Union 308, this week.

The editorship will involve laying out the sports section of the yearbook, writing picture captions and sports stories. Those applying should have a thorough knowledge of Oregon sports, Ford said.

All living organizations are asked to turn in membership lists, Janet Bell, living organizations editor, announced.

Miss Bell said that all house and hall membership lists must be in by Friday of this week. Lists should be slipped under the Oregana office door or left in Miss Bell's envelope.

French Club Names Johns New President

Robert Johns, senior in foreign languages, has been elected new president of the French club.

Sally Calkins, freshman in liberal arts, is the vice-president, and Elena Horn, junior in foreign languages, secretary.

The club meets the second Thursday night of each month and any student interested in the French language and culture is invited to attend, according to Johns.

CAMPUS BRIEFS

● Dr. Raymond Grondahl, head of the division of clinical pathology at the Oregon medical school, will answer questions pertaining to medical technology at the medical school and their relationships to pre-medical technology program here in an open meeting Wednesday.
