DIOGENES??

By Larry Guinn
Emerald Feature Writer

"Where are you going, youth?" the man asked. "Sir," he replied, "I'm searching for the fabled five cent cup of coffee. I have travelled many a weary block down to the 'quad but seem unable to find it."

The man bowed his head and wept silent tears for a moment, then he said to the Oregon student, "Come with me."

They journeyed into a place called the "Side." The man pointed to the wall behind the coffee bar, where a sign was displayed. It read:

OBITUARY

On January 30, after a lingering illness, the 5-cent cup of coffee died.

Interment will take place immediately in its own grounds.

NEW PRICE

Ten cents

Then the man led him across the street to "Taylor's." There he learned to his increasing sorrow that nickel coffee had departed on Jan. 15. Down the way they found the "Rush Inn" where five cent coffee had reigned throughout the month of January as a special feature. It had come and gone with Groundhog day.

They stood on the street, the man and the student. "You see," the man said, "its all over with nickel coffee."

"But why did it have to go? It was so good."

"Consider this," replied the man kindly. "According to the National Restaurant association it costs six to seven cents to brew a cup of coffee. The restaurant owner must figure in his overhead expenses, such as labor, heat and utilities. When coffee is present as much as eighty percent of the total amount of the revenue, the management can't afford to lose two cents on every cup it sells."

"Remember," the man cautioned, "it isn't the retailer's fault that coffee prices are so high. Frost and insects in Brazil have done much damage to coffee crops. Consequently, the supply is short, forcing higher prices."

"Besides," he continued, "refills are still only five cents around campus. If you drink more than one cup, your marginal cost for the succeeding cups is a nickel. The more cups you drink the lower your average cost becomes, drawn down by the marginal cost. Therefore—"

"Thank you for your comforting words," he broke in. "They will help so much."

"Think nothing of it," said the man. "By the way, have you heard that by putting a nickel into a juke box you can get "Forty Cups of Coffee"?"

The student shuddered. That's terrible."

"I'm hurt," the man said, and they parted.

AFROTC Group Elects Officers

Jerry Farrow, sophomore in business, was elected president of the Air Command Squadron recently. The group is a newly-organized basic Air Force honorary composed of the top 20 sophomores in AFROTC. Farrow has announced plans for the selection of the top 20 freshmen in AFROTC for pledging later in the term.

Designed primarily as an honorary organization, the group will serve the campus in a limited capacity, Farrow said.

Other officers of the honorary president; Timothy James, secretary; Buzz Nelson, treasurer; Tom Stamper, operations, and N. N. Mihailov, adviser.

Sophomores named for membership in the group are Merle Atwood, Richard Bach, Otto Crumroy, Doyle Higdon, Lynn Husband, Dick Lundy, Robert Meador, Robert Ransom, James Richey, Howard Sussman, Samuel Vahey, Arthur Weber and Bob Wallberg.
