Rev. Kristian Jensen, who has returned recently from Korea where he was a prisoner of war, will be the guest speaker at the First Methodist church, 1185 Willamette st. at 8 p. m. Friday.

He will tell of his experiences as a prisoner of the Korean Communists in North Korea and something of the "philosophy" which kept him alive.

Art Makes Poor Mixer For Politics, Says Poet

There is a danger in drawing comparisons from art to politics — doing just that "has caused an awful lot of trouble," W. H. Auden, one of the foremost political poets of the day, said Tuesday night in the Student Union ballroom.

Speaking to approximately 150 persons, mostly faculty members and townspeople, Auden claimed that the differences between a poem and a civilization are "far more significant and important" than their similarities.

A society designed like a poem would really be "a nightmare of horror," the poet said, while "a poem like a democracy would be a windy and uninteresting thing.

However, Auden continued, "If I had to choose between a scientist dictator and an artist dictator I'd choose the artist." An artist believes in many different wholes, he explained, while a scientist believes in only one true whole.

Therefore, scientists will tolerate no exceptions to a rule, for an exception can be only an illusion or an error, he said. A scientist dictator therefore could not permit an exception to his rules.

Auden, who included parts of several poems in his lecture, was on campus as a Failing Distinguished lecturer.
