The President Speaks

University President O. Meredith Wilson will address students and faculty at a 1 p. m. assembly today in the Student Union ballroom.

We think this is an excellent opportunity for students to meet this man we've all been hearing so much about. And remember, if a University president is to come out of the ivory tower, it takes cooperation from both sides.

So, be there. President Wilson is a big man. He will have a lot to say to hold your interest.

Those Lines Again

How long did you stand in line, or should we say lines?

Somehow we can think of a lot of things we'd rather do than stand in a line. But we stood in line all day Monday. So did everyone else.

They started forming in front of the Dad's lounge before 7 Monday morning. They were still spilling out of the ballroom and Emerald hall late in the afternoon.

There were lines to pick up material, lines to register in the departments—and we pity the poor English majors, the lines were the longest there. There were lines to go through student affairs in the ballroom, lines to pay fees, lines to cash a check in the Co-op, lines to buy books.

Half the time we didn't know what the lines were for, but it gets to be a habit after awhile. You see people standing so you stand there too. It might not be the line you want but you just don't care anymore.

Emerald hall was like that. Just inside the door people were packed like those proverbial sardines. Further in, if you could fight your way through, there was plenty of room—and several payment windows with very few customers.

Couldn't some more efficient method of payment on the first rush day be devised?

In fact, the entire procedure seems a terrible waste of time. We remember the "old days" of pre-registration. That wasn't too pleasant either—we doubt if registering can ever be enjoyable.

But at least we didn't waste a whole day in the lines. And they weren't so long either. The new system may have advantages, it may cut down on the number of absentees in first-day classes, but we doubt if it's worth it. Don't we miss a whole day of classes anyway?

What will happen when it rains on registration day? We've been lucky so far, but those lines stretch a long way down 13th from Emerald hall. And they spill out of the ballroom door. When we get rain—and we will some registration day—the infirmary will probably be flooded with flu cases.

We can see it now—an all-campus party in the infirmary on the day after registration. (J.W.)

A Proud Tradition

The staff of your Oregon Daily Emerald proudly announces that, for the first time in a decade, the Emerald is financially solvent.

Emerald staffs, particularly of the past two years, have cut a lot of corners and done a lot of maneuvering to catch up with soaring printing costs, overcome problems of an undermanned advertising staff, and maintain increased staff efficiency demanded by the reorganization of the University press.

Emerald finances have been no secret on campus. But we wonder if many students are aware of how close the Oregon Daily Emerald came to buckling under to financial pressures. It's not a problem we face alone. Schools up and down the Pacific coast are reporting financial troubles on their student newspapers.

We think your Emerald is important enough for a little concern over such problems from the entire campus. And if the University of Oregon is to maintain a student publication, it can't be done by a handful of students over here in the Shack. Some of it has to come from the outside.

It has to come from campus publicity committees working in close cooperation with the staff. It has to come from interested, informed readers. It has to come from non-journalism majors finding their way over to the Shack.

So, if you have interest, ambition and one or two spare hours a week, we'd like to see you join in our fight to uphold a proud tradition. The Shack is always open and you're always welcome at the quonset hut next to Deady hall.

Grade Review

"On th' other hand—this 'F' just might reflect a pretty poor job of teaching."

Junior Weekend Theme To Bill 'College Capers'

Junior Weekend events this year will be built around a "College Capers" theme, weekend officials announced today. May 13 to 16 are the dates reserved for the weekend.

Pat Beard, junior in business, suggested the winning theme.

An all-campus clean-up and terrace dance will get the weekend events under way May 13 with the annual junior prom, luncheon, float parade, all-campus sing and the sunlight serenade following during the next three days.

Negotiations are currently being conducted with several California groups in an effort to bring a well known orchestra to Oregon for the prom. A definite announcement will be made soon, weekend officials said.

The prom is again scheduled for

Friday night of the weekend instead of Saturday as has been the custom since 1952.

Architect Visits Oregon Campus

An architectural educator and author, Henry Russel Hitchcock, will be on campus this week and will meet informally with classes of the school of architecture and allied arts.

Besides talking to architecture students, Hitchcock will deliver the opening address for the west coast regional conference of the Association of Collegiate Schools of Architecture Thursday.

The lecture, entitled "The Rise of a Commercial Architecture in England and America in the 19th and 20th Centuries," will be open to the public. He will also speak on Friday at an afternoon session of the association.

A graduate of Harvard university, Hitchcock is now professor of art at Smith college and director of the Museum of Art there. He also taught at Vassar college, Wesleyan university and Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The visiting lecturer is the author of a book on "Modern Architecture," one of the first publications in English to consider this field.

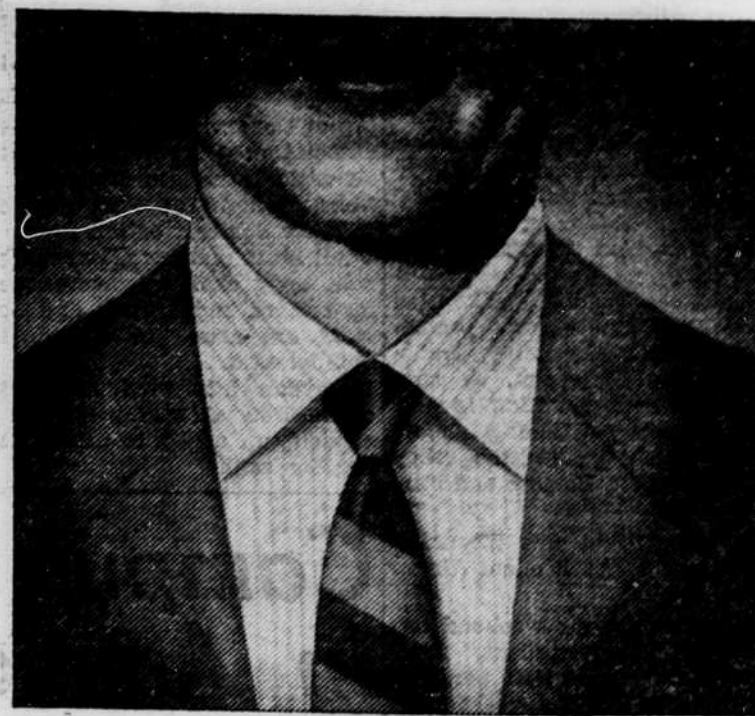

Economist to Speak To U of O Classes

Gerhard Tintner, professor of economics at Iowa State college, will lecture to economics classes next Monday and Tuesday.

Tintner, an internationally known economist specializing in mathematical economics, is the author of three books.
