It's Policy, Not Spite

Names of eight University students charged with liquor violations appeared in Wednesday's Emerald. This is the first time this year the Emerald has printed names in connection with this type of charge.

We did not print the names because we are "mad" at the women involved. We did not print them because we are "out to get" their sorority. We printed them as a part of our news policy of giving the public all factual information to us—in the future we will print any names available to us.

We do this because we feel it is part of good journalism. Students want to know the news. And facts stop rumors. If other students get themselves into trouble with the Eugene police force we are sorry, we sympathize, but we feel it is our duty to print the names.

This is the beginning of spring term, traditionally the time of picnics and "beer busts." Few are naive enough to think that picnics on this campus are without alcoholic beverages.

And we're certainly not going to sit here preaching a sermon admonishing you not to drink beer. This is a university and you're adult enough to make up your own minds, just as we consider ourselves old enough to make such decisions.

Spring term is legendary. It's the time for picnics, fabulous picnics we've heard about since we were freshmen. (Of course it's been raining too much since we arrived on campus for these fabulous events to have occurred, but we hear they're great.)

But there's a not-so-small matter of laws. These laws say minors should not drink alcoholic beverages. And they say that persons over the age required to spend Friday afternoon at Maxies should not buy alcoholic beverages for minors.

The Eugene police force has the job of enforcing those laws and they do a rather thorough job of it.

An arrest can mean a stiff fine, and it can mean severe disciplinary action on the part of the University. That action can be probation, suspension or expulsion.

Even if the fine and disciplinary action are light, an arrest can mean a good deal of embarrassment to you, to your living organization, to the University.

Publication of the names of violators adds to that embarrassment and we think the knowledge that your name will be printed if you're caught may make you stop a minute and at least consider the matter before going off on the spring term picnics.

Parents and critics of the University have a habit of noticing such charges. Think about it for a minute.

But if the names are available to us, we'll print them. You're old enough to be responsible for your actions. We're not "mad" at anyone, we're not "out to get" anyone. We consider these stories news and we still think our first job is to print the news no matter how unpleasant it might be to us, to our friends, to anyone.—(J.W)

Gasp of Disbelief

We seldom criticize such things on campus as a choice of theme for some event. But when "College Capers" slid across our desk as the selected theme for Junior Weekend, we just couldn't resist a little gasp of disbelief.

Surely, a campus the size of this University should be able to turn up something more original and fitting for one of the biggest events of the school year.

In the first place, we don't like the word "capers." It provides us with visions of elite collegians dancing across Red Square or a stretch of campus lawn, capering like elfin Pans in the moonlight. One does a lot of things in college, but we fail to remember any one of them that might be described as "capering."

But that is probably a personal idiosyncrasy. However, when we recall the Junior weekend theme is usually interpreted in the decorations of the floats, it gives room for pause. We see no possibility for "capers," collegiate or otherwise, to be honestly interpreted in line with the beauty and dignity of former Junior weekend parades. And the thought of a couple miles of floats capering up 13th st. is also a little hard to take.

What we regret most about this choice of theme, is the reflection which it casts on the members of this student body.

Surely, in this age of clever advertising slogans, catch words and phrases, some more original and clever theme should have been submitted.

Future Candidates 'Undecided Now'

ASUO presidency, but that he had not made up his mind on the matter yet.

AL OPPLIGER, senior class representative, told the Emerald that he will possibly return to school next year and possibly seek a political office though not the ASUO presidency.

HOLLIS RANSOM, UIS president and senator-at-large on the ASUO senate, who is a senior, plans on returning to school and is thinking about running for the ASUO presidency though he has not yet made up his mind.

BOB SUMMERS, also a senator-at-large on the ASUO senate, told the Emerald that he has been giving consideration to the idea of running for ASUO president, but he does not prefer to make any statement at the present time.

Between now and next Wednesday these and other interested students will have to make up their minds in order to meet the filing deadline.

Candidates must indicate on their petitions their name, grade point average, office sought, class and political party. The petitions must also be stamped at the office of student affairs in Emerald hall before they are turned in at the ASUO office.

Scholarship Open To Fresh Women

Freshmen women are eligible to apply for the Kwama scholarships, which will be awarded for next year, President Janet Gustafson announced Wednesday evening.

Applications for the awards may be obtained at the office of Mrs. Golda Wickham, associate director of women's affairs. The number and the size of the awards has not yet been determined. The basic qualification is need, Miss Gustafson said.
