Moose Head Held, Ransom Demanded

Herman the Moose has been found.

The large moosehead traditionally awarded the winner of "Ugly Man" contest, was discovered by the night watchman early Wednesday morning hanging from the "W" on the front of Commonwealth hall.

The physical plant told the Emerald Wednesday that Herman is being held for ransom, as considerable damage was done in hanging the trophy on the letters.

According to I. I. Wright, superintendent of the physical plant, several letters were loosened and some paint was scratched off the face of the building and the windows.

The prank occurred sometime around 1:30 Wednesday morning, Wright said. The night watchman was in Commonwealth at that time and returned a short time later to find the moosehead.

Ellickson Lists Energy Sources

R. T. Ellickson told a browsing room audience Wednesday that in the near future the American public will be called upon to make some important decisions about atomic energy.

Ellickson, head of the University physics department and associate dean of the graduate school, went on to say that unfortunately the necessary knowledge for making such decisions is not assessable. This is because of the atmosphere of secrecy surrounding atomic research for security reasons.

Nuclear energy is relatively new as an energy source and it is important that it be utilized, Ellickson said. He illustrated this by pointing out that in the 1860 years from the year one to the civil war the world used six times the amount of heat energy in 30 billion tons of coal. There is around one billion pounds of this energy in that much coal. However, since the civil war the world has used one-sixth of the energy it used in 1860 years. The amount of energy used will increase still further by the year 2000, Ellickson declared.

At the present time the world has about a 40 year supply of oil and gas, 350 years supply of coal, and a 2000 year supply of uranium. The amount of potential water power for electrical energy is trivial, Ellickson commented. Electrical energy will have to be created by nuclear energy.

Ellickson told his audience that there are some 80 designs for atomic power plants in the United States today. They differ only in what fuel will be used. "I think there is no way of telling which one is best until they are tried out," he stated.

The cost of nuclear energy for producing electricity is high because it costs more to produce the heat involved, Ellickson continued. The cost will be about 15 or 30 mills per kilowatt hour, as compared with regular electricity which is 7 mills on the average.

Other than minor technical and construction problems, the biggest problem in developing nuclear energy for electricity is political, Ellickson pointed out. "I don't know if we'll succeed in solving it or not," Ellickson said. "It is much, much tougher than the others." The United States, he feels, is too tightly bound up in the atomic problem to have enough freedom of action.
